SOVIET PLANE REPORTED 500 MILES NORTH OF SEATTLE

Moscow - San Francisco Flyers Change Route When Over Canada and Follow Pacific Coast Towards United States.

SILENCE OF NEARLY 12 HOURS BROKEN

Messages Report All Well So Far on 6000-Mile Non-Stop Journey of Three Airmen Across Top of World.

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 20. (Sunday)—Soviet Russia's pole-crossing fliers reported tonight they were skirting the Canadian coast about 500 miles north of Seattle on their flight of 6000 miles from Moscow to San Francisco Bay.

Estimates of possible arrival around 8 a. m. Eastern Standard time Sunday were advanced by observers.

At 12:08 a. m., Sunday, Eastern Standard Time, the plane's position was reported over Queen Charlotte Islands on the British Columbia coast by the Anchorage and Ketchikan stations and the Seattle Boeing airfield station.

At 11:45 p. m. Eastern Standard time the ship which left Moscow Thursday night, reported it was going over the islands and "everything was going well," the signal corps said.

The route over which the fliers must pass is a shore line heavily studded with bays on both islands and mainland. Dense timber covers the terrain.

The route roughly follows the "inside" passage ships travel from Seattle to Alaska.

Unreported for more than 12 hours, the flyers wireless signals finally were picked up by the Royal Canadian Signal Corps, which reported them about 100 miles south of Fort Norman, Northwest Territory, at 2:25 p. m. (St. Louis time). They said all was well.

At 3:40 p. m. the Canadian Signal Corps said they were believed to be over the confluence of the Mackenzie and Liard Rivers at Fort Simpson, 980 miles northeast o. Edmonton.

Trouble With Radio.

Russian sources tonight expressed belief the plane's radio transmitter failed to function as it approached the Northern border of Alberta.

They said the flyers had "complained" of trouble with their short wave appartus, with which they were both sending and receiving. At 4:45 p. m. the plane asked connecting stations to broadcast on 54 meters. Previously it had been using 26 meters.

Then after more than four hours of silence elapsed, Russian listeners concluded the flyers radio was at fault.

The 3:40 p. m. report indicated they had icked up speed greatly and were within 2000 miles of their goal.

At the last previous official report, 2:20 a. m., they were only 320 miles south of the Pole. The Canadian report showed they had covered about 1400 miles, passing through on the great unexplored stretches of the Arctic, in the 12-hour period of silence.

Flying at 4400 Feet.

The Canadian Signal Corps said the plane was flying at a 4400-foot altitude, that the radio channel was clear and that they soon would be in direct communication with Edmonton or Fort Smith, 535 miles north of Edmonton.

Weather conditions were reported favorable although skies were cloudy along some parts of the route. The temperature was comfortably above freezing during the day.

The flyers, Valeri Chekalov, Georgi Baibukov and Alexander Beliakov, left Moscow in their single-motored monoplane Thursday night.

On the basis of the 3:40 p. m. report the flyers had covered more than 4000 miles and had been out of Moscow 44 hours, 40 minutes.

Having traversed the hazardous Arctic regions where compasses fluctuate widely, and with its gasoline load considerably lessened, it was expected the plane would be able to increase its speed.

WOMAN TELLER LOST BANK'S MONEY ON MARKET, RACES

Mrs. Ferne Dennis Held to Federal Grand Jury in Chicago After Telling Story.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, June 19.—A story of stock market losses, with unsuccessful attempts to replace the money by playing the horse races, was told today before United States Commissioner Edwin K. Walker by Mrs. Ferne Dennis, receiving teller for the Lake Shore Trust & Savings Bank, charged with embezzling $8000 of the bank's money. Mrs. Dennis, 42 years old, a divorcee, waived her examination and was ordered held to the Federal Grand Jury under $5000 bond.

According to Assistant United States District Attorney, Daniel D. Glasser, the irregularities began seven years ago when Mrs. Dennis lost some of the bank's money on the stock market. More money was taken in an attempt to recoup her losses and this was used in playing the horses. Part of the embezzled money, Mrs. Dennis said, was used to defray medical bills for her mother, who since has died.

WHEELER SAYS ROOSEVELT SHOULD DROP COURT BILL

Reprisal Would Be Only Purpose in Pressing Measure, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Senator Wheeler (Dem.), Montana, said today that President Roosevelt's court bill should be withdrawn because to press it would only be for the purpose of reprisal.

Wheeler, who has been chosen to lead the Democratic opposition to the proposal, said in a radio speech under auspices of the National Grange:

"The present court has propounded a broad and liberal base for social legislation for the benefit of the worker and the farmer. There is no reason remaining for belief that ressonable legislation will be declared unconstitutional.

"To pack the court at this time would only be in the spirit of reprisal and such a spirit is not the spirit upon which this Government is founded."

UNVICTORIAN KISS CENSORED

Film Board Cuts Out Screen Caress in First Movie of Queen.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, June 19.—An official order against theatrical versions of the life of Queen Victoria was lifted on the eve of the 100th anniversary tomorrow of her accession to the throne. One stage play and one motion picture based on her life were approved for presentation. "Victoria Regina," Lawrence Housman's play, will have its initial performance here Monday, after a special performance before the Lord Chamberlain.

The French picture "The Court Warfare" was sanctioned for display in England only after a scene showing the Queen being kissed by Prince Albert had been cut out. The caress was described as "more of a screen kiss than a regal kiss," so the British Board of Film Censors decided it must be eliminated.

Commends Court Bill Report.

BOSTON, June 19.—The executive committee of the Massachusetts Bar Association today adopted a resolution commending the majority report of the United States Senate Judiciary Committee opposing President Rosevelt's Supreme Court reorganization plan.

$100,000 ADDED TO BILL AFTER LEGISLATORS LEFT

By the Jefferson City Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, June 19.—A mysterious addition of $100,000 to the appropriation for the State Board of Permanent Seat of Government so far unexplained by legislative officers and the House and Senate clerical forces, which restored to the civil list appropriation bill $100,000 of a total of $142,160 which had been struck from the bill by a Senate amendment, has raised a question as to validity of the item.

No one has been found so far, in an investigation of the $100,000 increase, who will admit any knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the addition of that amount to the bill, in an apparently unauthorized re-enrollment of the measure, as finally passed. The addition of the amount, through re-enrollment of the bill, took place after final adjournment of the Legislature June 8, but before the hold-over clerical forces of the two houses finished their work yesterday.

The change in the bill increased from $165,000 to $265,000 an item in the Board of Permanent Seat of Government appropriation for Capitol powerhouse improvements, installation of new elevators in the Capitol, acquisition of land for a proposed new prison, and other purposes.

All Deny Knowledge.

Speaker John G. Christy of the House, where the bill was re-enrolled to show the $100,000 increase; Senator J. Sidney Rollins of Columbia, chairman of the State Appropriations Committee; Representative John D. Taylor of Keytesville, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and employes in the offices of the Chief Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, all declared, when questioned, that they knew nothing about any changes in the bill, or its re-enrolling to show the increase.

The appropriation, bill No. 382, as first enrolled in the House in the final form in which it passed both houses, showed a total of $165,000 for the item in question. Shortly after the enrolled bill was printed and a few copies distributed, an effort was made to recall the copies, with the explanation that there had been some mistake. Subsequently the bill was re-enrolled and printed copies of this re-enrolled copy were issued, showing the item to be $265,000.

Journals of the House and Senate, both as to amendment of the bill in the Senate and adoption 'y the House and Senate of a joint conference committee report on the bill, show final approval of a Senate amendment which fixed the item in question at $165,000 and final passage of the bill as amended.

The Senate copy of the joint conference report, adopted by both

JUSTICE HUGHES ON UNCHECKED MAJORITY RULE

TALKS INFORMALLY TO AMHERST ALUMNI

Neither Can We Hope to Escape the Activities of Organized Minorities, He Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

AMHERST, Mass., June 19.—Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes today denounced both the "ruthlessness of a temporary majority" and the "activities of organized minorities."

Asserting that the fundamental needs of democracy were "moral,", he declared, "the ruthlessness of a temporary majority, if unchecked, will eventually lead to the entire overthrow of democratic institutions."

"We cannot hope," he continued, "to escape the activities of organized minorities, which may triumph from time to time. Sometimes they have more fervor than wisdom."

The 75-year-old Chief Justice did not elaborate on his references to the "temporary majority" or the "organized minorities," declaring it would not become him to speak of current interests.

He said he would "leave to the experts" the task of answering questions on current problems. Nor would he grant an interview as he left the campus for Providence, R. I., where he will attend the Brown University commencement exercises.

Then and Now.

Speaking briefly and extemporaneously, Chief Justice Hughes recalled his own college days, and declared:

Comparing former with present college days, Chief Justice Hughes said: "We belonged to the underprivileged class. We had certain immunities. We did not suffer so many bombardments of the minds.

"Perhaps we neglected the current affairs. Students had an opportunity to gain a historical background that could serve them in later years. In college," he continued, "the main difficult is to secure a dietary regimen to assure sound mental digestion."

The Chief Justice said that democracy carried the banner of freedom, and that there was no conflict between progress and liberty, adding that a thorough knowledge of democracy was one of the most important things educators could inculcate into youth.

"In possession of thorough knowledge of democracy," he said, "lies the essential resistance of propaganda and specious appeals of demagogues. I see the future of the country in hands of the youth who are coming out of our educational institutions this month."

He declared the highest mission of educational institutions was to send men out into the world equipped with thorough knowledge of their subjects and "emotional drive."

"Such qualities," he said, "would supply the essential resistance to specious appeals of demagogues and the irrational demands of zealots."

Anecdote of Coolidge.

He reviewed his association with former President Calvin Coolidge, Dwight Morrow and Supreme Court Justice Harlan F. Stone, all Amherst graduates.

He called Morrow a "statesman in business and an artist in the diplomacy of friendliness," former President Coolidge "the sagacious son of Amherst who enveloped the White House with an atmosphere of New England thrift," and declared of Justice Stone, "it is one of the greatest privileges of my life to be associated with that eminent jurist."

His audience chuckled when Hughes told of a meeting between Morrow and Coolidge in the White House. Morrow, he reported, asked Coolidge if he recalled the time his father asked young Calvin not to go to a dance and offered him a bribe of a quarter to stay away. "I don't remember about the quarter," Coolidge replied.

The Chief Justice was introduced today by Arthur B. Rugg, Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, an Amherst graduate.

At the conclusion of his talk, President Stanley King of Amherst told the alumni the unprecedented number in attendance was "a tribute to the distinguished gentleman who has just addressed you and to your college." He reported 20 per cent of the college's living alumni had come back for reunion.

GOV. EARLE ORDERS JOHNSTOWN STEEL PLANT SHUT DOWN

Pennsylvania Executive Sends 500 State Police to Preserve Order in Bethlehem Strike.

MARCH OF MINERS ON CITY CALLED OFF

Eugene Grace, Bethlehem Steel Company Head, Refuses to Close Plant and to Evacuate Workmen.

By the Associated Press.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 20 (Sunday)—The deadline set by Gov. Earle for evacuation of the Cambria works of Bethlehem Steel Corporation passed early today without indication that workers were leaving at the gates of the big Gautier mill, one of the seven main entrances to the works.

Col. Augustine S. Janeway notified the corporation he was placing "an adequate force of police" around the works to prevent "all persons and supplies from entering the plant."

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 19.—Col. A. S. Janeway sent by Gov. Earle with 500 state police to take over policing of Johnstown during the steel strike tonight ordered the Cambria plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co. closed at once.

Col. Janeway declared his orders to close the plant were given him by Gov. Earle.

At Harrisburg, Earle said two infantry regiments of the National Guard were ready to step into the Johnstown strike area if the plant did not close.

The company had requested until noon tomorrow to make an answer to the evacuation demands, but Earle said the management had had all day in which to act.

The 500 State Police were ordered to Johnstown today to keep order during a scheduled demonstration of 40,000 union miners at the Cambria plant tomorrow afternoon.

The demonstration, however, was called off at Washington by John L. Lewis president of the United Mine Workers of America and chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, at the request of Gov. Earle, who urged cancelation of the demonstration in the interest of public peace.

Grace Protests Against Order.

Regarding the order to close the plant Eugene Grace, president of Bethlehem, wired Gov. Earle tonight that "if the plant is evacuated upon the executive order it will be because of your failure to exercise the authority and power which you have to preserve law and order.

"That plant is in substantially normal operation today with the necessary number of employes at work," Grace said. "The result of ordering a shut-down at the plant and thus preventing the employes from working will be to make effective the effort of the C I O to prevent the operation of the plant which efforts have been successfully resisted by our employes who have no interest in that organization but who want to work and who are entirely satisfied with the conditions under which they are working.

"We also protest such order as against the interest of our company and its stockholders who also are entitled to protection by the Commonwealth and whose properties are bound to be greatly damaged if our Cambria plant be shut down and evacuated."

Statement of Earle.

"There can be only one justification for the modified form of martial law which I have ordered to be put into immediate effect—that is the maintenance of law and order," the Governor said. "In the present situation with the proposed march of miners into the heart of a section where repressed bitterness on both sides is plainly evident beneath the surface there are all the elements of potential serious disorder.

"Any one of numerous cases of violence already brought to public attention might furnish the spark to set off a mass clash between the strikers and their sympathizers on the one hand the non-strikers and vigilantes on the other.

"I will not wait until such an outbreak and consequently bloodshed occurs to take the steps proper and necessary pending action of the Federal Steel Mediation Board. It would be too late to act after lives are lost."

Explaining the extent of State intervention at Johnstown, Earle said: "We are only taking over policing, disarming of the vigilantes and the closing of plants. We have not taken over the courts and will not unless it is necessary and I don't think it will be."

PROTESTANTS WILL DEFY NAZI ORDER, THEY ASSERT

Declare They Will Take Up Special Collections and Read Out Names of Resigned Members.

BERLIN, June 19.—Protestant Confessional Synod leaders dcelared tonight they would insist on their right to take up special collections and read the names of resigned church members from pulpits despite Nazi prohibitions.

It was announced that the Rev. Mr. Heine of Schneidemuehl, whose arrest was disclosed last night, had been freed. However, his colleague, Von Phadden, president of the Pomeranian Confessional Church, was put under arrest.

Berlin synod headquarters was informed last night that the Rev. Mr. Heine and the Rev. Mr. Middendorf of Oldenburg were arrested on charges of violating the Interior Ministry's decree that forbids reading from pulpits the names of those who have resigned from the church.

By the Associated Press.

VIENNA, June 19.—Thirty-nine persons accused of plotting terroristic acts against the Government tonight were sentenced to from two to seven months' imprisonment.

Part of the alleged conspiracy was a purported plot to kill the Chancellor and bomb the chancellery.

The sentences were imposed soon after the outlawed Austrian Nazi party demanded in a widely circulated "proclamation to the world" that it be restored as the legitimate "voice of the German people."

WITH THE INSURGENTS ON THE EDGE OF BILBAO, June 19.—Spanish insurgent troops marched into Bilbao unresisted today and the long desperately-fought seige of the hitherto invincible capital of the Basques ended.

As the victors in the three-month campaign moved cautiously into the city, chief obstacles to their progress were swarms of prisoners and refugees moving out. Not a shot was heard as the soldiers marched in to take formal possession for Generalissimo Francisco Franco shortly after noon.

The last defenders, said to have been Asturians, fled over the Western hills toward Santander, after blowing up eight bridges across the Nervion River.

Refugees told tales of complete disorganization and panic. They said Bilbao had been terrorized at the end by roving bands of Asturians and Santander militiamen. The refugees carried what few possessions they could. Most of them were simply wandering out of the city with no destination until they met the insurgents. Most were convinced they had narrowly escaped death at the hands of lawless bands.

Basques Turn on Asturians.

Basque militiamen numbering about 500 and a few civil police guards surrendered to insurgents and laid down their arms along with thousands of Basque soldiers.

The city was in complete control of a few hundred Asturians in the early morning when they started up blowing up the bridges.

That was to much for a battalion of Basque militiamen who did not flee the city with thousands of other Basques and citizens. The battalion moved against the Asturians, herded them on the outskirts of the city and by dawn had cleared out the last group of dynamiters. The militiamen then flew a white flag from the telephone building and awaited the insurgent invasion.

1000 Prisoners Released.

One insurgent force moving from Begona, Northwestern suburb, into Bilbao, encountered a straggling column of 1000 insurgent sympathizers just freed from prison.

Two hundred of them carried rifles given them by members of the Itzaldi battalion, a Basque organization supporting the insurgents. The rebel sympathizers had opened the doors of Larrinaga prison in the heart of Bilbao and told the prisoners they would have to get out of the city as best as they could.

Most of these ex-prisoners were weak and half-starved, without strength to carry rifles. As they met the incoming troops they raised feeble cheers.

For hours, they said, they had feared their release would mean only death at the hands of Leftists still in the streets. The prison gates had been opened at midnight. Then they formed their column, with the 200 armed men on the sides, in front and behind, and women and children herded in the middle.

At almost every street intersection they were halted by armed Asturians who questioned their right to leave the city, but the 200 rifles proved sufficient for safe conduct. The Asturians made no real attempt to stop them.

The insurgents loaded them on military trucks, gave them food, supplied them with Carlist red berets to identify them and sent them to a refugee camp near Vitoria.

Last Two Roads Cut.

Before Gen. Franco's men moved in, insurgent officers declared their encirclement of Bilbao was accomplished with the cutting of two roads leading west to Santander. All routes for further escape or for aid from outside were closed, they said.

The investment of the city was declared completed when an insurgent clumn drove across the two roads, captured Mount Arraiz and pushed on to the Fort of the Little Mountain on the west bank of the Nervion River, northwest of Bilbao.

Accounts to the insurgent lines told of intense suffering and panic among the 300,000 non-combatants

FIVE DEPUTIES AMONG INJURED AT YOUNGSTOWN

Clash Starts When Officers Turn Gas on Woman C I O Sympathizers and Crowd of Pickets Retaliate.

WORKERS CORNER POLICE IN TUNNEL

75 Deputies Rushed to Their Aid—Bullets Fired From Surrounding Hills—Mary Heaton Vorse Injured.

By the Associated Press.

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, June 19.—A C I O picket was killed and 11 persons injured tonight in a three-hour fight between police and striking employes of the Republic Steel Corporation. Pistols, tear gas and bricks were used in the clash which took place at the company's plant a mile from the city.

During the fighting Sheriff Ralph Elser sent 75 special reputies to aid police and mobilized 75 more for possible use. Shortly after midnight Police Chief Carl Olson announced "everything is under control." At that time the firing near the plant had virtually ceased.

List of Casualties.

The dead man was John Bogovich, who carried a picket card of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee.

The injured included five deputy sheriffs, two of whom were hurt seriously. The list follows:

Deputy Clifford Faust, cheek wound.

Deputy Mike Menning, shot in chest.

Deputy O. Lawler, shot in chest.
Deputy Jack Barrett, shot in hip.
Deputy Ted Wilson, shot in leg.
Nick Velicko, C I O organizer, struck on arm by flying object.
Thomas Osraby, shot in hand.
Edward Salt, Youngstown Vindicator photographer, shot in leg.
Katherine Wright, shot in leg.
Rocco Luscri, shot in arm.

How Fight Started.

The fighting started when woman C I O sympathizers were ordered off company property by police. They refused to leave and police fired tear gas into their ranks, C I O leaders said.

Screaming, they gave way, and a crowd of strikers rushed the police, forcing them into a railroad underpass.

Bullets were fired from hills surrounding the isolated plant.

Pickets not engaged in the fighting formed lines across the roads east and west of the plant, blocking the highway, in an apparent attempt to prevent the reinforcement of the police.

The strikers quickly hemmed in the police.

Sheriff Elser, cruising in the vicinity when the fight broke out, was warned back by strikers waving bricks and shouting threats.

The sheriff raced to police headquarters.

The Sheriff ordered all police cars to the scene and sent two loads of special deputies in armored cars to aid them.

C I O Leader Asks for Troops.

John Mayo, district leader of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, called Gov. Martin L. Davey to ask for troops.

The Governor, reported at his home in Kent, O., could not be immediately reached.

"The woman pickets were sitting peacefully in front of the plant and police ordered them to move," Mayo said in describing the clash.

"When they refused to go, the police shot tear-gas into the group. There were many children, too, when the shooting started, and the men pickets ran toward the police."

Mayo said as soon as word of the skirmish spread into the town, hundreds of men rushed to the plant

COLLECTIVE FARM PLAN DECREED BY NAZIS FOR JAN. 1

Decree Says Plan Will Redistribute Acreage Within Community to Be Worked in Common.

CHANCE OF LAW SUITS IS CUT OFF

Each Participant Will Hold Rights Corresponding to Amount of Land Contributed.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, June 19.—The German Government tonight ordered a sweeping redistribution of agricultural lands by pooling large numbers of small farms into collective enterprises.

A 20-page decree, effective next Jan. 1, provides that each participant shall hold rights corresponding to the amount of land contributed.

The basic idea of the new system is to increase efficiency in agricultural production.

Unlike the Communist collective farming system, the new Nazi development will not simply transform many peasant holdings into one big farm, it is said, but will redistribute land within a community so as to heighten efficiency of each individually operated plot as well as promoting community ownership and operation of such land as can efficiently be worked in common.

Under the existing system, some peasants are compelled to divide their time among several small tracts situated miles apart. The first effect of collective redistribution would be to give each farmer all his land in one piece.

Law Suits Barred.

The possibility of extensive litigation arising out of the redistribution was ruled out by the Government by making the Minister of Agriculture the final arbiter in all disputes.

Roland Freisler, State Secretary of the German Ministry of Justice, described the new laws affecting the status of the farmer as not merely "a revision of laws affecting agricultural property rights, or a modification of inheritance rights to agricultural land," but the establishment of an entirely new status for the farmer as member of the national community.

Every German farmer now knows that his relationship to the soil he tills is a functional relationship, not simply a matter of title.

As to Land Ownership.

His function is to make the land produce what the nation needs, and if constituted authorities find he is inexcusably delinquent in fulfilling this function, no legal title can save him from being thrown off the land to make room for someone who will produce.

On the other hand, the right of a mortgage-holder to foreclose is decidedly not to be taken for granted; in the case of the "erbhof" (hereditary farm) no mortgage is possible, nor even the sale to outsiders of such a family homestead.

Freisler emphasizes that the new conception of functional relationship embodied in the legal system presently developing must not be looked upon as mere revision of the old conception of property rights.

"There is no longer any need nor any room for an abstract right of ownership of land," he explained.

BILBAO FALLS; PANIC IN CITY AS REBELS ENTER

still in Bilbao despite the large evacuaations by land and sea to Santander and France.

Refugees said there had been no water supply for four days, and no food and no electricity for two days. They said doctors and nurses deserted their patients as they fled with most of the civil authorities of Bilbao.

The remaining population, they said, was huddled in tunnels, cellars and other refuges, waiting for the terror to end.

From insurgent lines at Bilbao's edge the city appeared calm, a picture of desolation. Here and there were smoke columns. The University of Commerce, apparently dynamited, was burning. Other fires appeared to come from the Vasconia steel works, one of the largest in Spain, the postoffice and the Municipal Savings Bank. Series of explosions indicated Basque ammunition stores were being destroyed.

Into the insurgent lines at Begona came a group of women and a first aid man, his apron stained with the blood of wounded he had just treated. The women said water dripping from the roofs of railway tunnels had been their only drink. They had eaten only black bread, hard as granite.

"In the streets are many bodies of soldiers who died for lack of care," said the first aid man. "They are dying like flies in the hospitals."

He declared many Bilbao citizens suspected of insurgent leanings had been killed.

On the now blocked roads to Santander were scenes of confusion, the ways choked as earlier refugees, turned back by the insurgents, mingled in despair with newcomers fighting to get away.

Heavy Fighting Near Aravaca, Northwest of Madrid.

MADRID, June 19.—Government and insurgent troops battled today near Aravaca, northwest of Madrid, in the heaviest fighting on the Madrid front for weeks.

Machine gun and rifle fire from the battle echoed in Madrid between heavy exchanges of artillery fire along the western edge of the city.

Twenty persons were wounded in earlier shelling of Madrid today.

HENDAYE, French-Spanish frontier, June 19.—Capture of Bilbao by insurgents ended months of wandering for 200,000 Spaniards.

For nine months, they fled from village to village in Northern Spain toward Bilbao before insurgent troops.

Many of them left homes more than 100 miles away, plodding along the roads with household goods and domestic animals.

A thousand old men, women and children trudged to San Sebastian on the northern coast of Spain when Irun fell to insurgents last September. San Sebastian was taken soon afterward. Additional thousands of refugees joined in a march westward.

Each successive insurgent drive forced thousands more into the wandering army. Little by little, their possessions were sacrificed. Many of their animals were lost, died of hunger, or were taken by retreating Basque soldiers for military use.

Thousands who fled as insurgent forces drew closer to their homes straggled into Bilbao's narrow streets. They slept on the sidewalks, sought safety in air raid shelters and enormously complicated the problem of feeding the Basque capital's citizens.

As the insurgent pressure on Bilbao became more intense, thousands of refugees again prepared for another flight westward. They found the narrow roads out of the city choked with retreating Basque militiamen. Insurgent airplanes and field guns bombarded the road leading to Santander, making travel impossible.

Church bells rang, firecrackers popped and thousands shouted "Viva Franco!" throughout insurgent-held Spain to celebrate the fall of Bilbao. Headquarters of insurgent Generalissimo Francisco Franco said his troops entered Bilbao at 2:30 p. m. The announcement was flashed by insurgent radio stations throughout Franco's territory.

The fall also was announced to newspaper men on the border by insurgent headquarters at Irun.

Col. Juan Troncoso, insurgent commander at Irun, later said advance detachments entered the Basque capital at 1:30 p. m., the main body of Franco's troops moving in an hour later. Every bridge in the city, he said, had been blown up.

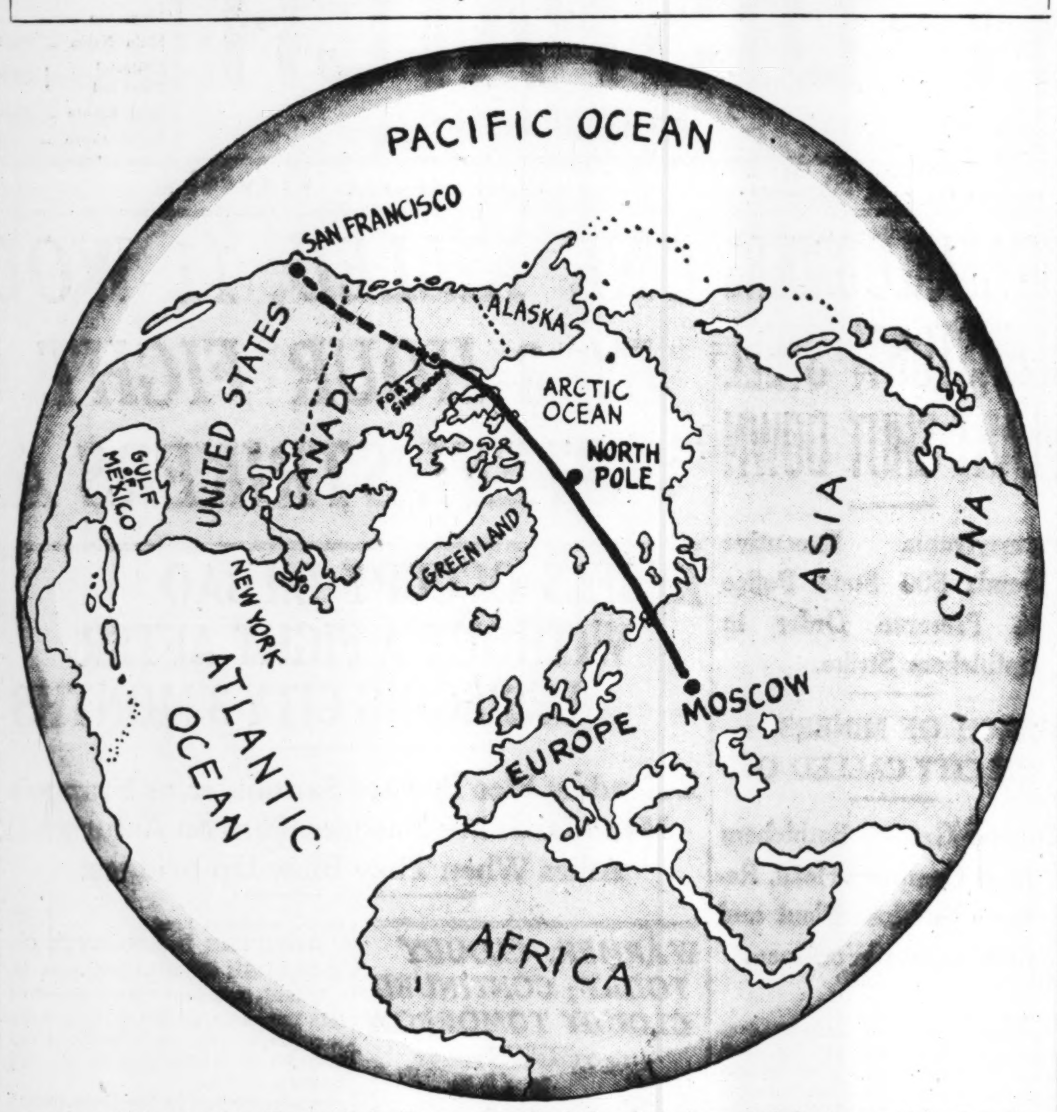
Route of Soviet Flyers Across the North Pole



AT an early hour today (Sunday) the flyers announced they had changed their route and headed down the Canadian coast.

said the long interval of silence probably was due to poor radio conditions as the plane sped through the unexplored Arctic region.

Even in obtaining the 3:40 p. m. report, the Canadian signalmen said they had been unable to transmit messages to the plane.

During the long period of silence the United States Army Signal Corps, as well as various commercial and amateur operators, listened for the plane, anxious because its reports last night said ice was forming on the wings.

Bearing southward after passing close to the Pole, the three flyers passed within a few hundred miles of the little known area which scientists call "a magnetic and mathematical jungle."

This is region about the magnetic North Pole, in the North Canadian Islands. It is more than 1500 miles south of the true North Pole.

Secrecy imposed by Russian authorities at the outset of the flight made the route and the progress uncertain to observers in North America.

First position reports left the course in doubt but later messages indicated the plane, carrying 2000 gallons of gasoline at the start, had gone overland 1000 miles northward from Moscow, crossed the Berents Sea and headed for Franz Joseph Land, 1700 miles from its starting point.

The flyers apparently changed their course slightly on reaching Franz Joseph Land and headed so that their route came close to the true polar cap. The 3:20 a. m. report put them south of the pole and over the middle of an unexplored "blind spot."

from Youngstown and nearby Struthers and Campbell.

The fighting raged in the dim-lit street in front of stop gate No. 5 and in the darkness of the railroad underpass leading into the plant.

There, the little group of police held their ground, keeping off the attackers with repeated volleys of tear-gas.

At 11:30 p. m., Sheriff Elser said the fighting was still going at full-pitch, with C I O pickets hidden on the hill overlooking the plant and sniping at his men with rifles and pistols.

Shortly before midnight, Elser rushed the third carload of deputies to the scene and mobilized 75 more.

Wounding of Mrs. Vorse.

Mrs. Vorse, gray-haired writer for magazines, was wounded after the fighting had died down.

"Scotty O'Hara (C I O organizer) and I were walking up a street near the plant," she said: "All was quiet. The street was empty.

"We passed a group of pickets without trouble. I said to Scotty 'am I cramping your style? He said 'no, come on, everything is all right'

"A truck of 20 deputies came by. Before them was a sparse group of strikers. We turned around and I thought they wouldn't shoot but at that moment two strikers ran and dropped at my feet.

"I can't say exactly what happened, but apparently the deputies were shooting at the strikers and a bullet somehow glanced and hit me."

Eight Men Arrested.

Police Chief Olson announced the arrest of eight men, including Joe Gallagher, a C I O organizer. All were held on open charges. Vern Thomas, city law director, announced he would place charges Monday "after a full investigation."

Sheriff Elser said all roads leading into Youngstown were being closed. He telephoned police chiefs in surrounding towns, asking them to summon the necessary men to blockade all entries to the city.

The Republic plant has been shut down since the strike started May 26. Until tonight only a small picket force was maintained there.

The commissioners of Mahoning County, where 20,000 men are idle in the steel strike, declared today Sheriff Elser "has over-stepped his authority" and "can expect no further co-operation in breaking picket lines.'

Elser has sworn in more than 100 special deputies, and obtained armored cars, tear gas and hand grenades with the announced purpose of "preserving the peace."

Chairman Tom Bees of the Commission, referring to the Sheriff's escort of a carload of food into a strike-bound plant two weeks ago, told him at a meeting today:

"We feel that the Sheriff has overstepped his authority in his attempt to break the strike by going through the picket lines with food and supplies for men inside the mills. The Commissioners are unwilling to spend any public funds in furtherance of the cause of either side and the Sheriff can expect no further co-operation in breaking through the picket lines."

Canton Mayor Orders Arrest of Pickets Carrying Clubs.

By the Associated Press.

CANTON, O., June 19. — Mayor James Seccombe ordered police today to arrest steel strike pickets found carrying clubs. This action followed a public statement that he intended to remain neutral in the strike, but that he also intended to preserve the peace and enforce th law.

About 50 men last night attempted to pass the picket lines and enter the Republic Steel plant, but they were met by strikers and sympathizers, and in the ensuing clash several of the back-to-work group were captured and taken to union headquarters. One was hit in the face and slightly injured. Police rescued the men and escorted them home.

Three Soviet Flyers Year Ago Flew 5823 Miles Through Arctic; Sketch of Careers

Chekalov, Noted for Daring Skill, Barbukov, Boy Wanderer Who Became Air Authority, Beliakov Life Student of Meteorology.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The three Soviet airmen—Valeri Chekalov, George Baibukov and Alexander Beliakov—made a long-distance non-stop flight about a year ago in the A N T-25. Their route was Moscow-Arctic Ocean-mouth of the Lena River-Okhotsk Sea-Kamchatka-Okhotsk Sea-mouth of the Amur-Moscow. Leaving Moscow July 20, they landed July 22 on the Island of Udd, near Nikolavevsk-on-Amur, having conquered exceptional difficulties in their flight through the Arctic, covered a distance of 5823 miles and remained in the air 56 hours, 20 minutes.

Making a landing with great skill on the little Island of Udd, the airmen left for Moscow a few days later, making stops at Khabarovsk, Chita, Krasnoyarsk and Omsk. By this remarkable flight over Soviet territory they accumulated knowledge which helped to make possible this year's trip to the North Pole and their own present flight across the pole from Moscow to San Francisco.

Who are these three Soviet pilots? Valeri Pavlovich Chekalov, the commander of the airplane, was born 33 years ago in the Volga district, and passed his childhood in about the same place as the great Russion writer, Maxim Gorky. Like all inhabitants of Volga provinces, Chekalov pronounces his words with a broad "O."

He is a man of middle height, broad shouldered, with the figure of a wrestler, and with an expressive and energetic face. As a boy, he left his home and went to work on the Volga as stoker on a dredger. At the age of 15 he joined the Red army as a volunteer, in the Fourth Aviation Park at Kanavin. Here he saw an airplane for the first time, and ever after that aviation became his dream. In 1921 his dream came true. He entered an air school and graduated as airman in 1933. A year later he graduated as pilot of a pursuit plane and also graduated from the Moscow School for Exhibition Flying.

Some of Reckless Stunts.

Then Chekalov worked a few years as airman in the Red Army. He soon earned a reputation by his hazardous and reckless flights. He loved to perform the most dangerous stunts in the air. He would fly between two trees with the airplane careened on one side, because the spread of his wings was wider than the distance between the trees. He would startle bathers on a beach by flying under a railway bridge.

Such dare-devilry and such lack of discipline naturally resulted in considerable unpleasantness for the young airman. But later he went into an aviation factory as airplane tester. Henceforth, his work was to take up newly built airplanes for the first time. In this work, full of novelties, difficulties and risks, Chekalov found his true vocation.

He soon became known as one of the best Soviet airmen on speed planes. The Government awarded him the Order of Lenin. After a demonstration of his skill during the May Day parade in 1935, Stalin conversed with him; and the next day he was presented to Stalin and had a talk with him.

Stalin asked him: "Why don't you use a parachute, instead of trying to save the machine as you usually do?"

Chekalov replied: "During a test, my whole mind is focused on bringing the machine successfully to the ground."

"But your life is dearer to us than any machine." Stalin said. "You must use a parachute if need arises."

Agreement With Wife.

Chekalov lives in a big house on the Leningrad Chaussee in Moscow. The windows of his apartment look out on the airdrome. His family consists of his wife Olga, a nine-year-old son and a three-year-old daughter. His wife and son can watch from their balcony the daily test flights of Chekalov, which are sometimes not without danger.

Olga Chekalov tells how, 11 years ago, when she married the pilot, he warned her as follows:

"We must have an understanding for all our lives on one thing," said Chekalov to his young wife.

"On what things?"

"We must agree that there shall never be any talk of dissuading me when a flight has to be made."

Ran Away When 10.

The second pilot, George Baibukov, is younger than Chekalov. He is 30 years old. His childhood was passed in a dull little wayside railway station, in the family of a railway worker. At the age of 10, he made friends with another boy of about the same age, and went off to wander around Siberia. They soon found themselves in a children's home at Barabinsk, but two years later they were excluded from there for "wild conduct."

Baibukov's wanderings continued until he got into a handicraft school; but he did not stay long even here. He was expelled for his habit of playing tricks and for his various pranks. He became acquainted with a war prisoner, a Czech named Vladek, who had settled in Siberia. From Vladek, Baibukov learned the trade of roofing houses, and together they used to go from town to town, and village to village seeking work. A short time later, his friend died. Baibukov began to work in a sanitary train.

In 1921, the future hero of the Soviet Union became a building worker on the railway, and then a porter at the Omsk River landing stage and a worker in Omsk factories.

Finally he succeeded in entering the Omsk railway school, where he successfully completed a course of training. From Omsk, Baibukov was sent to Leningrad, to attend an avaition school.

Thirst for Knowledge.

Not long ago in Moscow, the writer chanced to meet an old Soviet airman, Vladimir Zharnovsky. This was the old teacher of Baibukov. He said that Baibukov attracted general attention from his first flights owing to his natural ability to sense the slightest movement of the plane and steer it smoothly. Later, Baibukov astonished everyone by his thirst for knowledge. Thus, on his own initiative, sitting whole nights with books, he learned air navigation splendidly. He knew meteorology, was able to send and receive dispatches by radio telegraph, was able to determine the position of an airplane by the sun and the stars.

He was one of the pilots of the Soviet squadron that made an official visit to Paris.

Eugenia Baibukov, his wife, tells how her husband before the flight, spent all his days at the airdrome. Only two days before the flight of the ANT-25 he informed his wife and little daughter, who were living in a country cottage near Moscow.

"I saw my husband off at the station," she said. "I was very anxious again."

"George, what if something goes wrong?"

"We shall come down on an ice floe."

'And if you have to come down in the water?"

"We shall blow up the rubber boat. Don't be anxious, everything will be all right. You will soon see me again."

Navigator of Flight.

The third of the flyers, Alexander Beliakov, is the navigator of the flight. He is the oldest of the crew, being 49 years old. He was born near Moscow in the family of a village school teacher, who also had a small meteorological station. All the members of the family, including the eldest son, Alexander, had to help look after this station. In 1915, Alexander Beliakov completed his studies at the high school and entered the Forestry Institute. In 1916, during the war, he was called up to the army and sent to a military school. in February, 1917, he received the rank of junior lieutenant and in summer was sent to the front.

During the civl war, Belakov was commander of the chemical service in one of the units of the Red Army under the command of the famous Chapayev.

At the beginning of 1920 he was transferred to the Caucasian front and from here was sent to the airphotographic and photo-measurement school, where he completed the course in the air navigational section. Since then, Beliakov has devoted himself entirely to air navigation. Recently he has been teacher of navigation in the Military Air Academy. He has participated several times in big flights. During the last visit of the Soviet air squadron to Paris, he was navigator for the whole squadron.

Before his last year's flight in the A-N-T-25 he was awarded the Order of the Red Star.

The Soviet Government last autumn granted all three daring airmen the title of Heroes of the Soviet Union. They were decorated with the Order of Lenin and received also pecuniary rewards. In addition, the Island Udd has been named Chekalov Island and two neighboring small islands—Baibukov Island and Beliakov Island.

SIEGAL STOCK DEAL PUZZLES BAR COMMITTEE

Lawyer Advised Client to Sell Bad Shares and Buy Good Ones to Establish a Loss.

ADMITTED HE MAY HAVE ERRED IN THIS

Among incidents in the professional career of Attorney Edward I. Siegal, which Circuit Judge Charles B. Williams is studying before acting on the petition of the Bar Disciplinary Committee to disbar Siegal, is his handling of a claim of an elderly retired cabinetmaker who paid the lawyer $449 and got it back only after he had complained to the bar committee.

Siegal's client in this instance was Ernest Dix, 5472 Beacon avenue, who came to the conclusion, after trading 12 shares of preferred stock of the Illinois Light & Power Co. for 72 shares of stock of the Gast Brewery, that he had been defrauded because the brewery was in bankruptcy for reorganization. The testimony of both Dix and Siegal, given at hearings before the bar committee, is included in the evidence before Judge Williams.

Seeking the stock salesman who had persuaded him to make the trade, and unable to find him at an office in the Ambassador Building which he had used, Dix came across Siegal's office in the same building, and went to him for advice.

On this, the first of 74 visits which Dix made to Siegal's office between July, 1935, and January, 1937, each of which he noted in his diary, Dix gave the lawyer $53 for "court costs and filing fee," he told the committee. No suit was ever filed.

Siegal's Advice.

In September following the first visit, Siegal proposed to Dix that to establish his loss on the stock trade it would be necessary for him to sell the brewery stock and buy another 12 shares of the power company stock.

Members of the bar committee who heard the testimony of both Dix and Siegal on this transaction marveled at the method chosen to establish the loss. It was brought out that the fraud alleged occurred months prior to the suggested sale for the purpose of establishing the loss, and that in the meantime the power company stock had risen in value and the brewery stock had gone down.

However, Dix turned the brewery stock over to Siegal, who sold it, for less than $1 a share, and "credited" Dix's account with him for that amount. Dix did not have the $396 necessary at that time to buy the 12 shares of power company stock, but gave Siegal $205, and about a month later, the balance of $191. He said Siegal agreed to buy the stock when he got the $205, and that the $191 was to repay the lawyer for the balance due.

Denial by Attorney.

But Siegal, Dix said, kept putting him off when he asked for delivery of the stock, giving him various excuses and finally, on April 16, 1936, Siegal gave him a check for $504, the amount then necessary to buy 12 shares of the power company stock. Siegal told him at the time, he said, that he did not have enough money in the bank on which the check was drawn to cover it.

"He told me," said Dix, explaining this transaction to the committee, "'If you want to cash that check, I'll give you a check for some other bank where I've got the money in; but if you don't want the cash money, and you want to keep your stock, then I give you a check on the Mutual Bank.'"

Siegal's testimony was that he did not buy the power stock for Dix because by the time he had the full $396, the stock could not be bought for that price. He said he had never agreed to lend Dix the $191 necessary in September, 1935, to make the purchase, and had never represented to him, as Dix insisted, that he had bought the stock.

Dix testified he had never heard that explanation from Siegal until the committee hearing, and members of the committee, with the $504 check before them as evidence, asked Siegal what its purpose was, if it was not, as Dix said, for 12 shares of power stock at $42 a share, the price of the stock on the date of the check. Siegal said he could not explain, without consult-

SIEGAL STOCK DEAL PUZZLES BAR COMMITTEE

ADMITTED HE MAY HAVE ERRED IN THIS

Among incidents in the professional career of Attorney Edward I. Siegal, which Circuit Judge Charles B. Williams is studying before acting on the petition of the Bar Disciplinary Committee to disbar Siegal, is his handling of a claim of an elderly retired cabinetmaker who paid the lawyer $449 and got it back only after he had complained to the bar committee.

Siegal's client in this instance was Ernest Dix, 5472 Beacon avenue, who came to the conclusion, after trading 12 shares of preferred stock of the Illinois Light & Power Co. for 72 shares of stock of the Gast Brewery, that he had been defrauded because the brewery was in bankruptcy for reorganization. The testimony of both Dix and Siegal, given at hearings before the bar committee, is included in the evidence before Judge Williams.

Seeking the stock salesman who had persuaded him to make the trade, and unable to find him at an office in the Ambassador Building which he had used, Dix came across Siegal's office in the same building, and went to him for advice.

On this, the first of 74 visits which Dix made to Siegal's office between July, 1935, and January, 1937, each of which he noted in his diary, Dix gave the lawyer $53 for "court costs and filing fee," he told the committee. No suit was ever filed.

Siegal's Advice.

In September following the first visit, Siegal proposed to Dix that to establish his loss on the stock trade it would be necessary for him to sell the brewery stock and buy another 12 shares of the power company stock.

Members of the bar committee who heard the testimony of both Dix and Siegal on this transaction marveled at the method chosen to establish the loss. It was brought out that the fraud alleged occurred months prior to the suggested sale for the purpose of establishing the loss, and that in the meantime the power company stock had risen in value and the brewery stock had gone down.

However, Dix turned the brewery stock over to Siegal, who sold it, for less than $1 a share, and "credited" Dix's account with him for that amount. Dix did not have the $396 necessary at that time to buy the 12 shares of power company stock, but gave Siegal $205, and about a month later, the balance of $191. He said Siegal agreed to buy the stock when he got the $205, and that the $191 was to repay the lawyer for the balance due.

Denial by Attorney.

But Siegal, Dix said, kept putting him off when he asked for delivery of the stock, giving him various excuses and finally, on April 16, 1936, Siegal gave him a check for $504, the amount then necessary to buy 12 shares of the power company stock. Siegal told him at the time, he said, that he did not have enough money in the bank on which the check was drawn to cover it.

"He told me," said Dix, explaining this transaction to the committee, "'If you want to cash that check, I'll give you a check for some other bank where I've got the money in; but if you don't want the cash money, and you want to keep your stock, then I give you a check on the Mutual Bank.'"

Siegal's testimony was that he did not buy the power stock for Dix because by the time he had the full $396, the stock could not be bought for that price. He said he had never agreed to lend Dix the $191 necessary in September, 1935, to make the purchase, and had never represented to him, as Dix insisted, that he had bought the stock.

Dix testified he had never heard that explanation from Siegal until the committee hearing, and members of the committee, with the $504 check before them as evidence, asked Siegal what its purpose was, if it was not, as Dix said, for 12 shares of power stock at $42 a share, the price of the stock on the date of the check. Siegal said he could not explain, without consulting records, what the check was for.

Unresponsive Replies.

The committee questioned the necessity of the purchase of power stock to begin with and asked Siegal how he figured that its purchase after the trade in which Dix thought he had been defrauded, at a market price different from that prevailing at the time of the trade, would determine the market value as of the time of the alleged fraud. Siegal made several verbose replies which were not responsive, and finally said that he thought that was the way to do it, although his judgment might have been wrong.

Siegal's dealings with Dix constitute one count of the seven on which the bar committee petitioned for his disbarment. One of the other counts was Siegal's own admission that after obtaining $30,000 in government bonds from his stenographer, on the representation that he would invest the money for her more profitably, he used the money for his own purposes and is now unable to pay about $25,000 he owes her. His stenographer was Miss Marguerite Karch, daughter of the late Congressman Charles Karch of East St. Louis, now Mrs. Scerial Thompson, of Harrisburg, Ill.

ELY & WALKER DRY GOODS CO. SIGNS CONTRACT WITH UNION

A contract between Ely & Walker Dry Goods Co. and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers was signed yesterday, it was learned authoritatively last night.

Neither union nor company officials would discuss the contract, having agreed to withhold publicity at this time. The contract covers only Ely & Walker employes in St. Louis, and does not apply to workers in outstate plants. Wage increases are provided in the contract.

UNDERWEAR FACTORY SETTLES OLD STRIKE

Garment Workers Union Wins $13 Wage and 40-Hour Week From National.

The strike at the National Underwear Corporation, 239 South Boyle avenue, which began last February, has been settled and preparations are under way for the resumption of manufacturing, it was learned by the Post-Dispatch today.

L. J. Rothbarth, president of the firm, could not be reached, and no statement could be had at the offices of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, which directed the strike of the 139 employes who walked out Feb. 3 in protest against a wage cut. The settlement, it was learned, provides for a union shop, a $13 minimum weekly wage, adjustment of piece rates and a 40-hour week.

Shortly after the strike began, Rothbarth said he planned to discontinue manufacturing and advised the employes to seek other jobs. Meyer Perlstein, local union director, asserted that picketing would be continued indefinitely. Frequent fights broke out between pickets and persons opposed to the strike. The company sought an injunction against interference.

A committee of ministers investigated the situation and confirmed complaints of low wages and unsatisfactory conditions. The ministers reported that social security slips of 35 employes showed an average weekly wage of $6.96 for the period from Jan. 1 until the strike was called.

Recently pickets were withdrawn from the plant and it was learned that negotiations were under way.

TAX PAYMENTS WITHOUT PENALTY TOTAL $529,344

$250,000 of Sum Goes to City Which Needs $3,117,890; Delinquent Total About $14,627,000.

Delinquent real estate and personal property taxes, paid since June 10 when the new State law remitting interest and penalties became effective, totaled $529,344 yesterday, Collector William F. Baumann said.

Of this amount, about $250,000 will go into the city's general revenue fund, which has a deficit of $2,017,590 for the last fiscal year, and an estimated requirement of $100,000 to balance the current year's budget. In addition, the city must raise $1,000,000 or more this year for the demands of public relief, making a total requirement of $3,117,590.

The Legislation Committee of the Board of Aldermen will meet in executive session at 11 a. m. tomorrow to consider six new revenue measures in the form of special taxes, estimated to yield more than $3,000,000 annually. Mayor Dickmann, in an interview with reporters yesterday, urged taxpayers to pay up their delinquent taxes, now amounting to about $14,627,000.

Curtailing of Services.

The Mayor said that if the delinquent taxes were not paid, there were two alternatives—to assess special taxes, or to curtail public services, such as recreational and park facilities, "perhaps traffic control, street lighting, and others."

"Operating a city is like running a private business, and if the money owed to it is not paid, expenses will have to be cut. If only half the delinquent taxes were paid, there would be no unbalanced budget and no need for any spcial taxes. Taxpayers have a responsibility to the city, as well as its officials have to the taxpayers as public servants," the Mayor said.

Under the new State law, delinquent taxes may be paid before July 1 without penalties. If paid between July 1 and Aug. 31, the remission will be 75 per cent; between Aug. 31 and Oct. 31, it will be 50 per cent, and from Oct. 31 to Dec. 31, 25 per cent. Interest and penalties on delinquent taxes not paid this year will remain in force.

Baumann Criticizes Law.

The Mayor said he had not conferred on speeding up the payment of delinquent taxes with Collector Baumann, who is conducting a publicity campaign urging the taxpayer to pay up.

While pointing out that the new law remitting penalties was a saving to the tax debtor, Baumann said to a Post-Dispatch reporter that the law, and others like it passed in the last four years, "are not fair to the 80 per cent of taxpayers who pay up on time, and have placed a premium on not paying taxes promptly when they were due."

George Neville, cashier in the Collector's department for 36 years, estimated that bills passed by the State Legislature remitting taxes had cost the city $4,000,000 in taxes in four years. "The loss on this year's remission bill alone to the city will amount to about $2,000,000, and if the real estate dealers and the Chamber of Commerce do not stop their annual practice of inducing the Legislature to pass bills remitting penalties, the city never will balance the budget."

Neville, who appeared as witness at a hearing on the first remitting bill in 1933, declared that property owners deliberately left delinquent taxes unpaid until a remitting period came around, while they paid their current taxes.

He said the bills adopted the wrong policy of collecting, removing the only weapon—that is, penalty—to force collection.

Under the remitting bills, Neville said, the taxpayer escaped paying 36 per cent of his tax debt in 1933, 26 per cent in 1934 and 16 per cent in 1935.

In 1936, taxes collected amounted to 82 per cent of the levy, an increase over the 67 per cent collected during depression years, Neville added, "I believe it would be 90 per cent again, as before the depression, if it was not for the opportunity made by these bills to pay delinquent taxes without penalty."

MILLING COMPANY SUED IN PROCESSING TAX CASE

Bakers Allege They Paid $2100 in Increased Cost of Flour to Stanard-Tilton Co.

Two bakeries at Mattoon, Ill., filed suit in Circuit Court at Edwardsville yesterday to recover from the Stanard-Tilton Milling Co. about $2100 in A A A processing taxes which they claim to have paid in the increased cost of flour before such taxes were invalidated by the Supreme Court.

The plaintiffs are McDaniel & Son, and O'Connor-Bills, Inc. Their suit asks that the milling company be required to account to them and to all other customers for processing taxes it collected.

The Stanard-Tilton Milling Co., which has headquarters at Alton, obtained an injunction against the collection of the tax by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and after the Supreme Court ruling recovered from the Federal Court at Springfield $170,000 which it had deposited with the Court pending a decision on the validity of processing taxes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL RULES TAX TOKENS MAY CONTAIN ALLOY

New Mills for Missouri Probably Will Be 95 Per Cent Zinc, Auditor Says.

JEFFERSON CITY, June 19. — Missouri's new sales tax tokens may be a zinc alloy rather than pure zinc, and still comply with requirements of the 2 per cent law that they "shall be made of zinc," the Attorney-General's office told State Auditor Forrest Smith today.

Smith asked an opinion on whether or not a token made 95 per cent of zinc and 5 per cent of some other metal, to improve its appearance and wearing qualities, would be regarded as complying with the law.

Bids on the 50,000,000 new one-mill tax tokens to be issued under the new law were received June 16.

AMELIA EARHART LEAVES RANGOON ON WORLD FLIGHT

Destination Believed to Be Bangkok—400-Mile Trip From Akyab, Burma, Stormiest Yet.

By the Associated Press.

RANGOON, Burma, June 20. — (Sunday.)—Amelia Earhart took off at 6:30 a. m. today (6 p. m. St. Louis time Saturday) on the next stage of her flight around the world.

It was believed her destination was Bangkok, Siam, about 400 miles southeast of here.

By AMELIA EARHART.

(Copyright, 1937.)

RANGOON, Burma, June 19.—The short jump from Akyab, Burma, to Rangoon of 400 miles produced the worst weather encountered in several thousands so far. After trying yesterday to sneak underneath the monsoon, and again this morning, on the third try, we pulled up to 8000 feet, to be sure of missing the mountain ridges, and barged through. The gyro-pilot kept the course better than a human being could and gave a human pilot time to watch temperatures and pressures and r. p. m.'s of engine instruments.

After two hours we let down, and the bright grain plains beside the Irriwaddy River smiled up at us. Then for 50 miles we dodged rain squalls, which momentarily shut the sun from view. The first sight of Rangoon was sun touching the golden pagoda. This great structure stands on a rise of ground and could be seen for miles while the city was still but a shadow on the horizon.

Shortly after landing rain poured down so heavily that it was hazardous to take off for Bangkok. It is still raining as I write.

Sight-Seeing Tour.

Fred Noonan (navigator) and I decided to see something of Rangoon. Mr. Austin Brady, the American Consul, at whose home we stay tonight, lent his car and acted as guide, pointing out places of interest. He explained that the road we drove on was called Mandalay, and actually is the road to Mandalay, which is a day's motor trip from Rangoon.

Around the heart of the city we went. The people wear gay colors. There are many rickshaws and charries, which are one-horse vehicles, the inner furnishings of which I can only guess at, as most are shuttered. The rickshaw runners all wear conical coolie hats made of old kerosene tins, at least when it rains. I noticed some street cars with compartments for women only. These are reserved especially for Indian women, who are forbidden all male associations. However, women in general here seem to have more freedom and education than in most places we have been.

Many are in business and they have had a vote for many years. The widespread education of the Burmese is mainly due to a monastic school supported by the public.

Burmese People Slim.

I have seen no fat people. All seem slim and well built. Graceful lungyies worn in various styles accentuate their slimness. Mr. Brady's driver has promised to show me how to wind these garments on and fasten them.

After sighting the golden pagoda from the air, I had to examine it from the ground. To enter, one must be unshod, and plod up long flights of steps, worn by numberless feet before. For the first time on the trip, Fred Noonan failed me. He would not take off his shoes and socks and go inside with me. He missed a sight of hundreds of Buddhas of all sizes in little stalls, where drums and gongs were sold. Devotees were kneeling on mats and offering flowers before shrines, with sing-song prayers and strange jeweled ornaments.

There really was a woman smoking a "whacking white cheroot," too. These are made of corn husks and filled with leaves and some tobacco. They can be bought in sizes for weddings to last three days.

DOWNTOWN SHOE STORE HOLDUP

$30 Taken at Shop at 620 Olive Street.

Glass said he escaped from the room by climbing over a partition.

FRANK X. RELLER.

FRANK X. RELLER MADE PROBATION CHIEF BY JUDGES

Committee Which Sought Trained Worker for Position to Discuss Clerk's Appointment Tomorrow.

The appointment of Frank X. Reller, chief clerk in the office of Circuit Attorney Franklin Miller, as chief probation officer of the Juvenile Court, will be discussed at a meeting tomorrow of a committee of representatives of the Community Council and civic groups, which had urged appointment of a trained social worker.

Reller, an active Democratic worker in the First Ward, was selected unanimously by the Circuit Judges yesterday, meeting in general term, after four or more ballots had been taken, Presiding Judge Max G. Baron said. The choice ended a deadlock which had resulted when the Judges, earlier this month, were unable to agree on which of 12 applicants should be appointed.

The civic committee, in a letter to the Judges last month, asked that they consider only graduates of college or a school of social work, who had at least two years' experience in a social agency of recognized standing. Ben L. Shifrin, attorney, chairman of the committee, declined yesterday to say what attitude the committee would take, or to express his own views, pending the meeting.

Reller succeeds Jesse P. Smith, who resigned at the request of the judges, all of whom are Democrats. Smith had held the office for many years. The probation staff of the Juvenile Court is theoretically on a non-partisan basis, but Smith was thought to be a Republican.

In his new office Reller will be paid $4000 a year, $1600 more than his salary as chief clerk of the Circuit Attorney's office. He had been chief clerk there since Miller took office in 1929. Three years ago he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic nomination for Circuit Clerk.

Reller is 43 years old, married and has three children. He lives at 2418 North Euclid avenue.

In telling reporters of Reller's appointment, Judge Baron said he was regarded as best qualified of the applicants. Reller, he mentioned, had children of his own, had come into contact with delinquent children in his work for the Circuit Attorney's office, and had been active in Boy Scout and Big Brother Organization affairs.

STEEL MEDIATORS CALL BOTH SIDES FOR CONFERENCES

Board Meets C I O Leaders at 9. A. M. and Plant Executives at 11 A. M. Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, June 19.—The new Federal Steel Mediation Board, moving swiftly to settle the steel strike, arranged tonight to meet Monday with officials of the four affected corporations and with John L. Lewis, strike generalissimo.

Lewis and Philip Murray, his first lieutenant, are to meet the three-man emergency board here at 9 a. m.

Two hours later, the board is to see Tom Girdler, chairman of the Republic Steel Corporation; Frank Purnell, president of Youngstown Sheet and Tube; Eugene Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel and a representative of Inland Steel.

Strikes have been called in plants of all four concerns by the steel workers organizing committee over refusal of the steel companies to sign labor contracts.

Charles P. Taft, the board's chairman, said any effort to bring the two sides together would depend upon the outcome of the separate conferences.

Steel Mediation Board Meets

—Associated Press Wirephoto.

In a statement after an all-day board meeting, the board said that both the corporation and union leaders "expressed their readiness to meet with us as soon as possible but because of circumstances over which the parties concerned had no control, conferences cannot be held until Monday."

From a source close to the conference, however, it was learned that Girdler, invited to meet the board this afternoon, had said he would rather confer along with representatives of the other corporations.

Taft and Lloyd Garrison, another board member, cancelled College commencement speech engagements to be here Monday. They with Edward F. McGrady, assistant secretary of labor and the third board member, decided to stay in Cleveland over the week-end.

All members, the board's statement added, would stay here "as long as necessary in attempting to carry out this mediation successfully."

After the board had decided to delay any fact-finding hearings until after conciliation had been tried, the members spent most of the day making long distance telephone calls to arrange the Monday conferences.

To Seek Peace Proposal.

In bringing the leaders of both corporations and the steel workers organizing committee into the same building—even though not into the same room immediately—the board is using a mediation technique which has been frequently successful recently.

The board intends to ask each side to state its position and to ask each for a peace proposal. These proposals, if made, will be submitted to the other side for comment, suggested amendment, acceptance or rejection. This process then would be repeated until common ground was found.

Eventually, board members hope to bring both sides together around a peace conference table. Rejection of a proposal for a joint conference, however, would not mean the end of the board's peace attempts, it was learned.

Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania asked the board tonight to give its first attention to the strike at the Bethlehem Steel Corporation's Cambria plant at Johnstown.

A telegram he sent to Chairman Taft said:

"Earnestly recommend that you consider mediating steel strike in Johnstown first. Every facility of state departments at service of your board."

Arrival of Members.

The board held its first unofficial meeting in a hotel coffee shop this morning. Garrison, just arrived from Madison, Wis., found Taft there. This meeting was "strictly informal," however. They went from breakfast to a suite upstairs where they met James F. Dewey, veteran Labor Department conciliator, and Ralph A. Lind, Cleveland regional labor board director. Dewey and Lind recounted in detail developments.

The board's first formal meeting started shortly after noon with the arrival of McGrady by airplane from Washington.

Just back from the International Labor Conference in Geneva, McGrady refused to comment on the situation other than to say that every strike presented a different problem.

Bethlehem Chairman at His Summer Home; Thinks "We Will Come Out" All Right.

By the Associated Press.

LORETTO, Pa., June 19.—Charles M. Schwab, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, said today he was not pessimistic regarding the industrial situation.

Resting at his summer home here, the 75-year-old industrialist remained away from the turmoil in nearby Johnstown, where workers of Bethlehem's Cambria plants are on strike.

"I do not feel pessimistic," the Johnstown Tribune quoted him as saying. "I firmly believe that when the present industrial situation is cleared, and it will be cleared, the nation will advance to greater prosperity than ever before.

"We have come out of conditions resembling the present one before and I am certain that we will come out of this one in a manner that will be a great benefit to all people."

SHIRT WORKERS' CIO CHARTER

Presented to Local 247 by National Vice-President.

The charter for Local Union 247, Shirt Workers, affiliated with the C I O Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, was presented to the union last night at German House by Leo Krygski, national vice-president of the clothing workers.

Local 247 has about 1500 members, employed in shirt factories in St. Louis and vicinity. The presentation ceremony was followed by a dance.

POSTMASTER HAD AGREEMENT WITH STRIKERS ON MAIL

Massilon (O.) Official Says Packages Bore List of Contents for Pickets' Information.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Several Ohio postmasters and assistant postmasters testified before the Senate Postoffice Committee this afternoon, and all but one denied there had been any agreement with strikers not to deliver food or clothing to Republic Steel Corporation plants.

Fred W. Justus, postmaster at Massilon, testified he made an agreement with union leaders that service would be continued to the Massilon plant, but that in accordance with Washington instructions food and clothing would be rejected as "irregular mail."

Justus said mail for the plants was labeled with a list of its contents so that the postal delivery man could inform strikers what was in it when they stopped him.

He said that on one occasion the Massilon superintendent of mails overlooked "a package of candy." Although pickets permitted it to pass, Justus told the committee, "the head of the C I O called back in an hour and took me to task for what he called a betrayal."

Carl Armstrong, Youngstown postmaster, testified "we have bootlegged a few articles of parcel post through the pickets."

At this point Senator Bridges, who has charged that pickets had blocked mail by force, called the situation a "disgrace to this country."

Called in Union Leaders.

Harry A. Morceau, Postmaster at Niles, and M. B. Flaherty, his assistant, testified they had called in union leaders and notified them of the department's policy to deliver only "regular mail" and to exclude food and clothing.

"They said this was satisfactory," Flaherty testified.

A telegram to Senator Bridges from C. B. Galloway and Walter J. Payne, union leaders at Niles, had said they had an "understanding" with the Niles postoffice officials as to the kind of packages that were to be sent through the picket lines.

Harry J. Dixon, acting postmaster at Warren, and E. G. Stackpole, assistant postmaster, testified thousands of packages were refused for delivery there after instructions had been received from Washington to carry only "regular" mail. They told of several instances where pickets halted mail deliveries but said there had been no interference since the new policy became effective.

D. W. Jordan, Cleveland, an employe of the Republic Steel plant, submitted to the committee the wrapper from a special delivery package which he said pickets would not permit to be delivered at the Republic plant. On the wrapper was a penciled notation "C I O would not permit delivery."

Jordan asserted the notation was made by the delivery man.

Earlier today James E. Musgrove, a Republic Steel plant employe from Warren, testified he was shot at and subsequently beaten by union pickets when he attempted to go to work at Niles. He said strikers took his clothing from him, smeared him with grease, threatened to hang him and marched him through the streets of Niles.

Musgrove said that when the strike was called he was unable to go to work in the Warren plant because of pickets at the gate armed with baseball bats.

He and other workers then attempted, he said, to gain entrance to the Republic plant at Niles by going through a swamp at night. As they neared the plant, he said, pickets halted them, turned flashlights on them and started shooting. Musgrove and his companions fled.

Musgrove said he hid in a ditch for some time and later started for home. As he left the woods near the plant, he continued, he walked into a group of pickets. The pickets, he said, tied his hands behind him and told him they were going to hang him to a tree, but only beat him, tok his clothing and smeared him with grease.

When the men released him, Musgrove said, they returned his money and his watch, explaning they intended to keep 'strictly within the law.'

Musgrove's testimony provoked a long discussion among committee members.

Chairman McKellar (Dem.), Tennessee, contended the committee was only seeking evidence to determine whether a Senate investigation of alleged interference with the mails was justified. He pointed out the Senate Civil Liberties Committee was investigating some phases of the steel strike.

The committee failed to agree on when it would meet next, but Bridges said he reserved the right to subpena Postmaster General Farley.

STRIKE KEEPS FIVE SHIPS FROM SAILING

Sitdowns Result of Rivalry of C I O and A. F. of L. for Maritime Control.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—Sit-down strikes resulting from rivalry of maritime unions held five ships of the Eastern Steamship Line in port here tonight.

They were the freighter Madison and steamers Sandwich and Cornish, delayed since Thursday; the steamer Acadia, strike-bound since yesterday, and the steamer Wilton, which was scheduled to sail this afternoon.

The strikes were in protest against the removal of eight crew members of the line's steamer New York, members of the National Maritime Unfon, at the request of the A. F. of L. International Seamen's Union.

Hyman Glickstein, lawyer for the N M U, said the removal constituted interference with the Labor Relations Board, and that the union would maintain the status quo by strikes until a bargaining election was held.

Local 1175 of the Confectionery and Tobacco Jobbers Employes Union denied a report published yesterday that it had withdrawn from the A. F. of L.

NEW JURY SYSTEM FOR CRIMINAL COURTS

Centralized Method Already Used in Civil Division; Saving in Fees.

The centralized system of providing jurors for the Circuit Courts, which has been employed in the civil divisions since last December, will be extended in September, the Judges decided yesterday, to the criminal court divisions.

When that is done, all who are summoned for jury duty will gather in an assembly room in the Civil Courthouse, and as jurors are needed in the various courtrooms, they will be assigned to those rooms.

The system, functioning only in the civil diviisons, reduced the number of prospective jurors required each week from 550 to 300, resulting in a substantial saving in jury fees of $3 a day.

One of the Judges is assigned to the assembly room and those summoned for jury service who wish to be excused must present their excuses to him.

At the general term meeting of Judges yesterday Judge J. Wesley McAfee and Judge John W. Joynt were appointed a committee to devise a method of transporting jurors from the Civil Courthouse to the Municipal Courthouse, two blocks away, when the new jury system becomes effective in the criminal divisions. Judge Frank C. O'Malley, with Judges McAfee and Joynt, will recommend a method of feeding and lodging jurors who will be kept together during criminal trials.

MAN IN "IRON LUNG" COMPLETES PACIFIC VOYAGE

Transferred to Pullman Car at San Francisco for Trip to Chicago; Stricken in China.

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 19.—Frederick B. Snite Jr., 26 years old, was transferred from his "iron lung" aboard the liner President Coolidge today to a Pullman car that will take him to Chicago. He was stricken with infantile paralysis in China while on a world tour.

During the transfer, he was never out of the mechanism, which helps him to breathe, for more than three minutes. After the transfer, his father said he had gone through the ordeal well, and had suffered no relapse.

The patient was transferred to a portable respirator while the other was switched to the deck to be taken ashore. Then he was replaced in it and carried ashore by ship's officers.

The respirator was placed on a flatcar and carried to an awaiting Pullman, the rear of which had been removed to facilitate the transfer. Once the apparatus was inside, the real wall of the car was replaced.

A baggage car containing a spare respirator and a dining car for the Snite family were connected to the train for the journey to Chicago.

houses, shows final approval of th Senate amendment reducing the item to $165,000 but contains an entry, which does not conform to the journals or the action on the amendment, raising the total of the Board of Permanent Seat of Government appropriation from $553,110 to $653,110, that adding the $100,000. A request for production of the House copy of this conference report elicited a statement by R. E. L. Marrs, secretary of the Senate, that the House copy had been reported lost.

Considerable difficulty was encountered in obtaining access to the legislative records, which are public records. Speaker Christy had stated on inquiry, that R. E. L. Marrs, secretary of the Senate, had called his attention to the fact that the appropriation bills did not include a proposed authorization of $100,000 for the purchase of a site for a proposed new penal institution, after the Legislature adjourned.

Marrs, when questioned, said he knew nothing about it and referred inquiries to the office of the Chief Clerk of the House. He said the Senate copy of the conference committee report had been sent to that office, after he was told the House copy was lost, and that presumably it was attached to the original copy of House bill No. 382.

Inquiry at the Chief Clerk's office disclosed that office had turned over all of its records to Marrs. Assistant Chief Clerk James O'Brien said he knew nothing about any change in the bill, or its reenrollment. In the meantime, Marrs had left his office in the capitol and a request by reporters for inspection of the House records in Marrs' office, resulted in an employe of Marrs ordering reporters to leave the office. They remained, and after some further delay, Marrs was found and access to the records was obtained.

Marrs Says He Doesn't Know.

Marrs declared he knew nothing about any changes in the records, and referred reporters to the official copies of the Senate journal, which fixed the appropriation item at $165,000.

Christy, reached by telephone at his home in Festus, Mo., said he knew nothing about any change in the enrolled bill, to increase the appropriation by $100,000.

"I did not give anyone authority to re-enroll the bill," Christy said. "I would not have authority to issue such an order. Any such action, or any change in the enrolled bill, would have to be authorized by the House."

The Legislature had adjourned, when the change was made, and the clerical forces of the two houses were holding over for the purpose only of completing their clerical records.

Senator Rollins said he knew nothing about any change, and that so far as he knew that no alteration in the conference committee report adopted by the two houses had been authorized. This report held the item involved at $165,000.

Representative Taylor, reached at his home in Keytesville, also said he knew nothing about the change in the bill to increase the appropriation. He said it had been the intention to provide $100,000 for purchase of a site for a new prison, and added: "I am sure that if there was any change in the enrolled bill it was done to correct some mistake."

The bill is pending before Gov. Stark for approval. Members of the Board of Permanent Seat of Government, which would supervise expenditure of the appropriation involved, are the Governor, Secretary of State Dwight H. Brown, State Auditor Forrest Smith, State Treasurer Robert W. Winn and Attorney-General Roy McKittrick.

DEPUTIES REPASS BLUM BILL AFTER SENATE BEATS IT

This Throws French Premier's Fiscal Measure Back for Action by Upper House Today.

CARRIED BY VOTE OF 346 TO 248

Chief Answers Suggestion His Resignation May Ultimately Be Forced Over Financial Act.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, June 19.—The Chamber of Deputies tonight voted for the second time to give Premier Leon Blum full powers to rehabilitate French finances by decree. The bill now goes back to the Senate.

The upper house earlier by a vote of 188 to 72 rejected the bill embodying the emergency powers demanded by the Premier, the opposition charging they were dictatorial.

Premier Blum took up the challenge and, returning with his original demand to the chamber, received a second pledge of support in a late night session by a vote of 346 to 248.

The Senate not only rejected the Premier's proposals but passed a substitute bill substantially limiting his powers over finance.

"Resignation Attractive."

The Premier did not make the passage of the bill by the Senate a test of confidence in the Government, so the defeat did not compel his resignation.

Blum, in the midst of predictions that the defeat in the Senate would ultimately mean the end of his Government, said merely:

"Resignation would be an attractive idea to me, but what a disappointment it would prove to the country."

With that he went back to the chamber to get a new start in the fight and the deputies rallied to his support to enable him to take his demand to the Senate tomorrow.

It was necessary for the chamber to readopt the bill because the Senate, by its action, had killed it.

What Blum Wants.

Blum is demanding that the Cabinet must have the right to act without waiting for Parliament's approval to meet the problem of an estimated 1937 deficit of $1,760,000,000, to protect the franc and the Goverment's credit.

The Deputies passed the Premier's bill for the first time Wednesday after an all-night session.

Blum overcame opposition in the ranks of his own supporters Wednesday to drive the measure through the Chamber of Deputies. Communists threatened to withdraw the support they have given the Socialist leader since the combined Left parties won the parliamentary election of 1936; but they capitulated to keep the People's Front intact.

HAMILTON-BROWN CO. HEARING ON JUNE 28

N L R B to Consider C I O Union Charge of Unfair Labor Practices.

An examiner for the National Labor Relations Board will hold a hearing June 28, at Union, Mo., on a complaint against the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., which charges unfair labor practices. The complaint was filed yesterday by the recently organized Local 125 of the United Shoe Workers of America.

The union, a C I O affiliate, alleges that the company, on May 3, discharged six employes and laid off 106 others who had been active in organizing the union. On May 17, the complaint adds, a majority of the 750 employes of the factory chose the union as their agent for collective bargaining.

The company had threatened to close the factory and otherwise has attempted to intimidate and coerce its employes against union organization, the complaint adds. It charges that citizens of the community, at the instigation of company officials, have sought by propaganda and public pressure to prevent organization of the union.

Employes of the factory, unorganized until May 17, conducted a strike in April which closed the plant for two weeks. They sought, but did not obtain, a wage increase of 15 per cent. The strike ended when Luke E. Hart, president of the company, agreed to take back without discrimination those who had participated in the strike.

Offices of the company in St. Louis were closed yesterday and it was said there that no officer could be reached for comment.

ATLANTIC FLYERS HERE TODAY

Merrill and Lambie to Stop Two Hours at Lambert Field.

Dick Merrill and Jack Lambie are scheduled to spend two hours at Lambert-St. Louis Field this morning, arriving at 10 o'clock in the plane they used to complete a round-trip Atlantic flight last month.

The flyers, on their way East from the West Coast, are scheduled to stop next at Chicago. Last September Merrill flew the Atlantic both ways with Harry Richman, night club entertainer. Merrill and Lambie are airline pilots.

DEMAND FOR WPA JOBS ON EAST SIDE GROWS

Fred G. Austin, Director, Says He Does Not Know Reason for Increase.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Fred G. Austin, Works Progress director for the East St. Louis and Alton district of Illinois, said to day that damands for W P A jobs there have increased sharply during the past few weeks.

"I don't know the reason for it," Austin said, "but I do know that we have more men looking for jobs now than we had a few weeks ago."

Austin, on a vacation trip, stopped here to call upon members of the Illinois Congressional delegation. He said the present increase in the demand for jobs was in contrast to a steady decrease during the last two years.

"When W P A was started two years ago, we had 30,000 persons certified for jobs and we employed 19,300 in the East St. Louis and Alton district," he said. "Now we have only 15,000 certified, and we are employing about 14,000. That's why this increased demand for jobs is surprising."

He said Southern Illinois communities would be discouraged from submitting W P A projects if Congress should write into the new relief bill a requirement that the project sponsors be required to pay 40 per cent of the costs.

"It would mean that a lot of work would be killed off," he said. "We have had projects for which the sponsors paid as much as 70 and 75 per cent. But many communities, such as mining towns, where incomes have been very low, could hardly pay more than 10 per cent."

He said he believed another proposal, requiring 25 per cent payment by the committees, would be generally satisfactory "if there was some discretion for the benefit of those communities which plainly couldn't pay that much." He said the average payment in Southern Illinois was approximately 22 per cent.

No Significant Changes in Industrial Conditions.

Inquiry by Post-Dispatch reporters yesterday indicated there have been no significant changes in industrial conditions or in direct relief appropriations in the East St. Louis and Alton district recently.

One township supervisor, who is in charge of direct relief disbursements in his territory, said the only cause he could assign for increased applications for W P A jobs is that temporary fluctuations have been created by layoffs on W P A projects. Men discharged from W P A work usually apply for direct relief, he said, and then are recertified by relief officials to W P A.

HOLDS MARRIAGE OF GIRL, 12, MAY BE VALID IN ILLINOIS

Judge Joyce of St. Clair County Orders Release of Bride, 14, of Man, 26.

Marriage of a girl 12 years old may be valid in Illinois under the common law, Circuit Judge Maurice V. Joyce of St. Clair County held yesterday in granting a writ of habeas corpus for the release of Mrs. Mollie Hall, 14-year-old East St. Louis Negro, who had been held in the County Detention Home at Belleville since June 4, the day after her marriage to Avoisie Hall of East St. Louis, 26-year-old Negro.

Judge Joyce's ruling was based on a decision of an Illinois Appellate Court in 1917, which held that an Illinois statute, permitting girls between 16 and 18 to marry with their parents' consent, was vague in not covering marriages at earlier ages. The old common law permits girls of 12 or more and boys of 14 or more to marry.

Mollie Hall was sent to the Detention Home at the request of her grandmother, Mrs. Janie Johnson, with whom she lived at 1342 Central avenue. The girl's attorney Saul Cohn, said about $7000 damages were due her for the death of her father, killed in a railroad accident several years ago.

W. F. BLANKE ESTATE INVENTORIED AT $379,000

Two Children Are Beneficiaries Under Will of Retired Manufacturer.

The estate of William F. Blanke, retired manufacturer, who died April 17, was valued at $379,000 in an inventory filed yesterday in Probate Court.

The inventory listed real estate holdings in St. Louis valued at $60,360 and other property totaling $315,830. The largest block of stock included in the estate was 250 shares of U. S. Steel common.

Mr. Blanke's two children, a daughter, Mrs. Aileen Blanke Weldon of Mamaroneck, N. Y., and a son, William F. Blanke Jr., 5215 Lindell boulevard, were listed as beneficiaries.

Mr. Blanke was head of the old W. F. Blanke Can & Manufacturing Co., with offices at 116 Pine street. He formerly resided at 5215 Lindell boulevard.

CAMPAIGN TO RAISE $175,000

Money Sought for New East St. Louis Hospital.

A campaign to raise $175,000 for a new two-story hospital at Twenty-ninth and State streets, East St. Louis, was begun today in a city-wide canvass by the St. Clair Hospital Association.

The old hospital, built in 1899, has proved inadequate in space and facilities. The Rev. Walter Schlaretzki is president of the association. Donations received have been $5000 from the Protestant Women's Welfare League and $2000 from Immanuel Evangelical Church.

20 FEDERAL AGENTS QUIT PARSONS SEARCH

20 Others Remain on Scene Awaiting Ransom Word From Kidnaper.

By the Associated Press.

STONY BROOK, N. Y., June 19.—Search for Mrs. Alice McDonell Parsons, Long Island woman who disappeared from her home here a week ago last Wednesday, slackened tonight following the withdrawal of 20 Federal Agents from the case.

Twenty other Government men remained on the scene, hoping for some further word from the author of a $25,000 ransom note found on the Parsons' farm the same day Mrs. Parsons disappeared.

The organized search of the surrounding countryside, in which 200 C C C workers, volunteer firemen and others participated, was discontinued after 14 square miles had been covered without result.

NORMAN THOMAS BARS 'POPULAR FRONT' IDEA

Sees Nothing in Europe or U. S. to Make Him Favor Communist Aliiance.

By the Associated Press.

NAPONOCH, N. Y., June 19.—Norman Thomas, national chairman of the Socialist party, declared tonight his opposition to any "popular front" party which merges Socialists and Communists. He told a conference of the League for Industrial Democracy he had "seen nothing" either in political developments in this country or on his recent trip abroad to make him favor such a union, "open or tacit."

Thomas, in effect, answered Earl Browder, secretary of the Communist party, who proposed last night that the Farmer-Labor party for whose advancement the conference was called should be "the American equivalent of the people's front in France."

Thomas disagreed at that time he said he favored Socialist-Communist co-operation "on issues on which a common agreement can be reached," but opposed "a blanket agreement for joint action or organic union."

Alfred M. Bingham, editor of Common Sense and executive secretary of the farmer-labor political federation, urged the conference toward "a real people's movement, not a mere farmer-labor alliance for the furtherance of special immediate class interests, but a popular crusade, such as the New Deal has already foreshadowed—a crusade to achieve an abundant life and true social justice for all."

BOSS PENDERGAST BACKS M'ELROY'S STRIKE POLICY

Approves Kansas City Manager's Refusal to Assign Police Guards to Building Jobs.

By the Associated Press.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 19—Boss T. J. Pendergast, head of the powerful Democratic organization here, held a long conference with business leaders today in which he vigorously approved the policy of City Manager H. F. McElroy in refusing to assign police to guard building jobs affected by strikes.

Talking at greater length and more freely than on any occasion within the memory of his listeners, Pendergast counseled the business men against mass meetings, branding them "dangerous."

Business men have held rallies in the Municipal Auditorium recently to protest against McElroy's stand. Instead, Pendergast advocated arbitration by small groups chosen from union leaders and employers.

"You would leave the conference room, regardless of the immediate outcome, with a better feeling," he advised.

Pendergast assured his listeners who described themselves as the "Citizens' Emergency Committee for Maintenance of Law and Order" that union leaders had promised to avoid inciting violence, adding: "I'll say with all the vigor in my heart these men never told me a lie in 25 years."

Committee Statement.

The committee issued a statement after the conference, saying: "We are recommending to employers whose men have been driven off their jobs that they recommence operations Monday morning."

J. C. Nichols, residential builder who headed the law and order committee, was admonished by Pendergast against getting overly "aroused." "I say it kindly," Pendergast smiled.

A building strike prompted formation of the Nichols group. Union sympathizers visited jobs and in some instances escorted men off the premises. Employers insisted their men wanted to work and demanded that McElroy assign police to accompany the union sympathizers. The demand was refused.

Conversation at the conference digressed toward politics when Pendergast took note of charges that McElroy was acting under his orders for political reasons.

What Pendergast Said.

Waving toward a City Councilman nearby, Pendergast asserted: "He'll tell you how much I interfere at the City Hall. If they are not big enough to run the city, it's their fault, not mine.

"Attack does not promote harmony. I am urging the use of common sense to get together for the common good of Kansas City.

"A man hates to get slugged and he hates to hear mean things said about him."

Shortly after the conference ended, union leaders of the Building Trades Council voluntarily canceled a mass demonstration of organized labor called for tomorrow night to offset a mass meeting planned by the business group.

McElroy appealed to leaders to cancel the assembly, foreseeing "an element of danger." When told the meeting had been called off, the City Manager said: "I think that's a fine, maganimous thing. Boys, you've been big and decent about this."

SCHOOL BOARD CONSIDERS OPENING PUBLIC COLLEGE

Institution Will Be Recommended by Gerling if Funds Are Available.

Establishment of a public college in a central section of the city is being considered by the Board of Education, it was learned yesterday. It will be recommended by Superintendent of Instruction Henry J. Gerling if funds are available. The institution, somewhat informal in its mode of instruction, would be primarily for white high school graduates not fulfilling technical requirements of the universities.

An offer has been made to sell the board for $89,000 the Episcopal Home for Children, 1711 South Grand boulevard, for use of the college, but officials regard the price as too high, estimating remodeling would cost $50,000.

Purchase from Washington University of the former home of Mary Institute, Lake avenue and Waterman boulevard, also is being considered by the board for use partly for its general educational museum. Formal negotiations have not been entered and the price has not been fixed. Remodeling cost has been estimated at $25,000. The St. Louis Museum of Science and Industry, temporarily housed in the old Courthouse, has been considering use of part of the Lake avenue building at a nominal rental to the board. The board's museum must be moved soon from the old Crow School, 3325 Bell avenue, which will be opened in September as a Negro grade school.

Merrill and Lambie, Trans-Atlantic Flyers In St. Louis Today

Record-Breaking Round Trip Aviators to Be Guests at Airport Reception From 10 A. M. to 12 Noon.

Dick Merrill and Jack Lambie, the round-trip trans-Atlantic flyers, are scheduled to arrive at Lambert-St. Louis Airport at 10 o'clock this morning and to be guests of honor at a public reception until 12 noon, when they will depart for Chicago.

They will fly here from the West in the course of a good will tour arranged to give the general public an opportunity to see and inspect the airplane in which they made their recent flight across the ocean and back.

The plane, it is stated, will be in the same condition as when they made their flight, the idea being to let St. Louisans see a trans-Atlantic plane as it actually was when winging its way over the Atlantic. All the flying instruments and auxiliary devices, including the extra gasoline tank on which the flyers depended for reserve mileage in case of strong head winds, will be in place on the craft.

Open to the Public.

The aviators will be welcomed by city officials and a committee from the Chamber of Commerce. The public is invited to the reception, which will be held at the airport, beginning as soon as the flyers arrive, and to view the plane.

The tour is sponsored by Walgreen Drug Stores, which is issuing tickets to customers at all its stores to insure good positions for inspecting the plane, which will be in a reserved place. The public is welcome. Arrangements for the aviators' visit are being made by a committee and R. Norton, district manager for the drug stores firm.

Plane Open to Inspection.

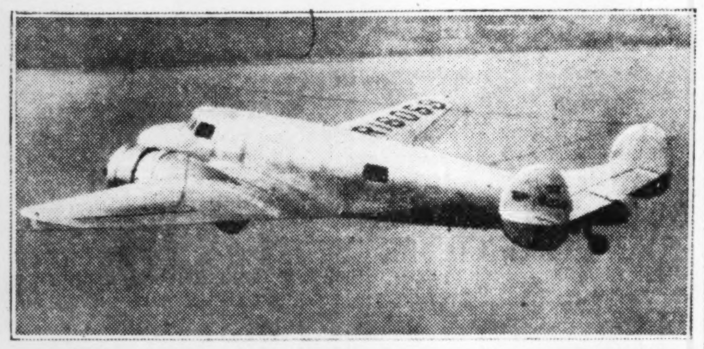
The plane, a twin-engined Electra monoplane weighing nearly eight tons with its 1200-gallon tanks full of gasoline, was flown by Merrill and Lambie from New York to a landing May 10 at North Weald, about 15 miles from London, in 20 hours and 34 minutes. They landed, to repair their radio set, then flew on to Croydon airport. They flew "blind" through rain most of the way.

Returning, they left London May 13, and 24 hours and 22 minutes later landed at Floyd Bennett Field, New York, having spent 22 minutes at the Squantum naval air station, near Boston, to get their bearings and check their gasoline supply. On this trip, they encountered bad weather most of the way.

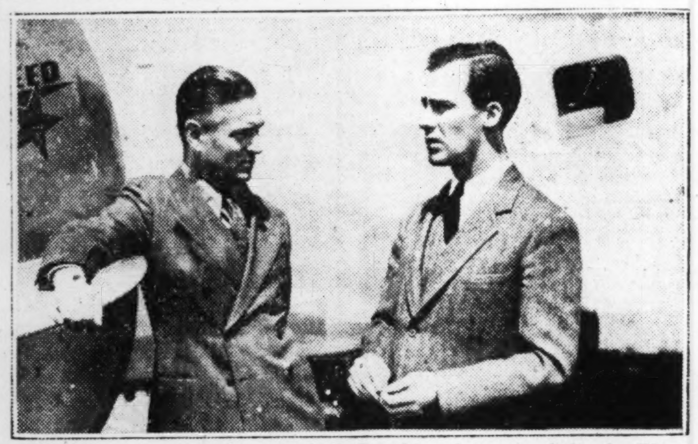
Merrill said that the round trip flight and their experiences had convinced him that commercial flights across the Atlantic were a possibility. They flew, he declared, as much in a routine way as if they had been flying a regular air route with passengers.

Last September, Merrell made a round-trip flight to England with Harry Richman, the singer and comedian. They made the eastward flight in 17 hours and 45 minutes, being forced down in South Wales. Returning, they flew from England to New Foundland, where they again were forced down.

Trans-Atlantic Plane Here Today



Airplane used by Dick Merrill and Jack Lambie for their flight from New York to England and back which will be at Lambert-St. Louis Airport from 10 o'clock this morning until noon, so that the public may see it. It will be in the same condition as when flown across the Atlantic.



Dick Merrill (at left) and Jack Lambie, the trans-Atlantic fliers, who will fly here to be guests at a public reception at Lambert-St. Louis Airport from 10 o'clock this morning until noon, when they will depart for Chicago.

Six Truck Drivers Have No Accidents in Million and Half Miles

In Laredo, Tex., six truck drivers have driven a fleet of General Motors trucks more than a million and a half miles without accident.

The drivers, all employed by the Netzer Truck Lines in Laredo, have just been presented safety certificates by the Laredo Junior Chamber of Commerce Safety Committee and cash awards by the Netzer Truck Lines.

Their records, the truck company reports, all were made within the last 10 years and were due largely to safety features in the vehicles they were driving.

Three-Way Talking System and Police Cars In City in New York

A three-way communication system is being used by the Eastchester Police Department at Tuckahoe, N. Y.

Installed in De Soto business coupes, it allows policemen in one car to converse directly with other cruising police cars.

Under the usual police radio system, a squad car, calling for help from another cruising car, must transmit the message through the central sending and receiving station at headquarters. The Tuckahoe system, however, not only permits squads to exchange messages with headquarters, but also allows cars to contact other cars quickly.

Radio set equipment and batteries are carried in the De Soto business coupe luggage compartment and transmitters and receivers are in the front compartment. The broadcasting is on the five meter band.

NEW GENERAL SALES MANAGER FOR AIR LINE

LYLE A. BROOKOVER,

Who has been appointed general sales manager for Chicago & Southern Air Lines, Inc., with offices in the company's general headquarters in St. Louis. He succeeds Rogers Humphreys, who resigned to make a home with his wife and son at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands. Brookover at one time was a newspaper man in Cleveland and Washington, then was publicity director for the American Road Builders' Association, later was on the Washington staff of the United Press, and for the past two years has been public relations adviser to Maj. George L. Berry, Co-ordinator for Industrial Co-operation.

'Eggshell' Radio Compass On Sleeper Transports Of American Airlines

Two-foot bakelite "eggshell" radio compasses, on the American Airlines' trans-continental Douglas sleeper transports, contain a loop antenna, pervious to weather and ultra-sensitive. The new set is static proof, eliminates snow and ice static, and range static, and is completely encased against the elements. Being streamed-lined, it offers no resistance in flight.

At Grand Central Air Terminal, an official of the R. C. A. laboratories at Camden, N. J., was supervising installation of eight of these unique radio compasses on transports. Near by, a small squad of American Airlines pilots practiced with a sample eggshell.

Mounted on a dummy fuselage that rolled around the hangar on wheels, the compass was aimed at either a commercial broadcasting station or an aircraft range station. Two pilots, earphones on their heads, then "located" themselves, became lost again and then "homed" into the airport with the wireless compass.

The new instrument includes developments since the World War on marine radio directional equipment. It was designed by the United States Signal Corps to locate enemy broadcasts and later adopted by the United States Coast Guards for locating ships in distress. It now constitutes a separate radio, added to the three already carried by the air liners. This will give American Airlines' flagships four separate radios—the Department of Commerce radio, the company radio, the emergency radio, and the homing compass.

When the tiny loop inside the weather-proof eggshell is aimed at a station—long or short wave—the sound reaching the pilot's ears is steady and clear. But when he slips off his course, the buzz increases, drowning out regular signals.

It will now be possible for American Airlines, with this new homing compass, to tune in on the radio beam, the company broadcast and on broadcasting stations.

Goodrich Co. Making 32,000 Products of Rubber in 1000 Lines

The business outlook for the rubber industry is the most encouraging in years, P. J. Craden, B. F. Goodrich Co. salesman in the St. Louis district, declared on his return the past week from Akron, O., home of the Goodrich company.

"Many new uses for rubber combined with increasing passenger car production and improving general business in almost all lines, have contributed to the excellent showing now being made by our industry," Craden said. He was congratulated by S. B. Robertson, president of the Goodrich company, on his outstanding sales record for a period ending in March.

Twenty-six other Goodrich salesmen from all parts of the United States who led their respective districts were also in Akron as guests of the Goodrich president and other sales officials.

Craden said that the company was employing 17,000 persons in its principal factories in Ohio and manufacturing 32,000 rubber products in 1000 distinct lines.

Goodrich will observe its sixty-seventh anniversary in December.

Cleveland Police Use Radio-Equipped Cars In Safety Campaign

Cleveland's Safety Director Eliot Ness has set in motion an accident prevention program which is attracting the attention of safety authorities. The campaign utilizes a fleet of 15 Studebaker safety cars manned by squads of Cleveland's police.

Specially designed for safety work, these radio-equipped Studebakers will cruise Cleveland, receiving radio reports of traffic accidents flashed from a central station. Their work is not of law enforcement alone. Complete analysis will be made of the conditions surrounding every traffic mishap, and the findings of the safety fleet will be used for a twofold purpose. In court, the evidence of these trained observers is expected to do much to clear the usual conflict of testimony concerning the condition of the streets, cars and drivers at the time of the accident. One of their functions will be recommendations to the proper authorities as to changes in traffic regulations and improvements in directional signs, and other suggestions based on the daily observations.

Ness says that the personnel of his safety fleet is composed of a picked group of men who have completed an intensive six-week training course at the Cleveland Police Academy. Under the direction of Police Lieutenant Patrick Lenahan, they were instructed in the most advanced practice in accident investigation and prevention. Aiding Dean Lenahan were Cleveland's Deputy Traffic Commissioner John R. Samon and Coroner Samuel R. Gerber.

Sixty H. P. Ford Climbs to 13,500 Ft. Elevation in Andes

A stiff test for a motor car is the climb to the statue of Christ, an elevation of 13,500 feet at the crest of the highway over the Andes between Chile and Argentina.

The journey from Santiago, Chile, takes a car to altitudes encountered on few other highways in the Western Hemisphere. It offered no serious obstacles, however, to a 60-horsepower Ford V-8 which recently made the climb.

Although the Ford was powered with the lighter, economical engine and carried three passengers and photographic equipment, it made the trip without difficulty. Moreover, it was not necessary to add oil or water at any time on the 220-mile round trip from Santiago, the report said.

The first leg of the jaunt made by the 60-horsepower Ford was from Santiago, 1680 feet above sea level, over the Cuesta de Chacabuco grade, which took the party to a 5000-foot elevation. The route then descended to Los Andes, a border town, to climb again to Rio Blanco, 5000 feet above the sea. From this point the way led to Portillo, climbing to a 10,000-foot elevation in 25 miles, then four miles to Caracoles, 11,200 feet, and five miles farther to the top of the Andes road to the 13,500-foot elevation.

The trip to the statue of Christ can be made only in the Chilean summer, for in winter roadways are blocked by snowdrifts which sometimes reach a depth of 25 feet.

$254,000 Payroll Reduction Urged by School Board Member

Mark Eagleton Says Cuts Should Be Made In High Salary Brackets—Before Committee on July 8.

Members and executive officers of the Board of Education have begun to study the proposal of member Mark D. Eagleton, submitted unexpectedly Friday, for a reduction of about $254,000 in the annual payroll, outside of the teaching corps and the permanent force of mechanics and laborers.

Eagleton asserted that many exorbitant salaries were being paid. The cut he advocated amounted to 2.4 per cent of the entire payroll in the tentative budget for the fiscal year which will start July 1, or 15.2 per cent of the payroll exclusive of the teaching corps, mechanics and laborers.

Appropriations listed in the tentative budget totaled $12,212 1 for the year, of which 85.6 per cent, or $10,457,693, would be devoted to salaries and wages. The latter figure includes $8,335,000 for the teaching corps, $460,000 for mechanics and laborers and $1,662,693 for all other salaries.

Application of the system of automatic increases of pay at stated intervals, as a reword for continued good service, to various classes of employes outside the teaching group was a particular point of complaint with Eagleton.

One Salary Questioned.

He questioned the pay of only one of the six executive officers of the board—Charles L. Barr, supply commissioner, at $7500 a year. Executive officers are elected for four-year terms at fixed salaries. Barr's term will expire next December and it would be possible for the board to cut his pay in reelecting him, but this would be contrary to its practice, under which usually re-election meant an increase in salary.

As a minority member of the Auditing and Supplies Committee, Eagleton objected to Barr's recommendation that the $100,837 in low bids for the annual coal supply be accepted. By a vote of 9 to 2 the board overrode Eagleton's report and upheld Barr's recommendation at a recessed meeting Friday.

Earlier this month the board re-elected Superintendent of Instruction Henry J. Gerling for a term beginning next January, increasing his annual pay from $11,000 to $12,000. The other officers, their pay and expiration of their terms are follows: Philip J. Hickey, secretary-treasurer, $7500, January, 1939; George W. Sanger, building commissioner, $7500, January, 1939; William M. Susanka, auditor, $7500, July, 1939; Emmet [illegible]. Carter, attorney, $500, February, 1941. Carter is the only one not required to give full time.

Eagleton's "Bombshell."

Eagleton's surprising communication, which some of the members called a "bombshell," was presented as a letter to the finance committee. A lawyer, elected to the board this April, he has shown himself by this proposal, his fight on the coal contracts and his immediate espousal of the Negro side of a controversy over a new school site, unwilling to adhere to the board's orthodox methods of handling it business. The board traditionally has sought to iron out differences in private discussion.

The Finance Committee had a routine meeting scheduled before the board session Friday, but the gathering yas protracted, in private, when the letter was read. Various officers were summoned for consultation. Later, after the board's open meeting, an executive session was held, lasting about a minute, long enough for President Francis C. Sullivan to urge the members not to disclose Eagleton's proposal until it could be taken up in normal manner next month. All board members were present except Vice-President Edward A. Ferrenbach.

Question Up on July 8.

Officers will be consulted about the proposed pay cuts by the Finance Committee before the committee's monthly meeting, July 8. The changes, if made, would be incorporated in the budget to be adopted by the board, July 13. Eagleton reminded his colleagues that the net operating deficit in the budget for the new fiscal year would be about $1,000,000, to be met from the board's dwindling surplus account. He used this as an argument for reducing salaries.

Other members were not prepared to predict the fate of the proposal, but there were some indications of opposition.

Eagleton made it clear that he was not advocating a cut for the teaching corps and its administrative heads, constituting the bulk of the payroll, but that he regarded other departments as auxiliary to the educational function and hence a fair field for economy. He did not touch the force of about 190 permanent mechanics and laborers, most of whom are union men, receiving union wages.

Cuts in Pay, Not Personnel.

In most instances, reduction of personnel was not advocated, but only a lowering of pay. However, the letter suggested the elimination of the jobs of F. W. Linnemeyer and Charles D. Welch, superintendents of plumbing and electric work, respectively, at $5000 a year each, and of seven of the 11 employes of the building department drafting room and six of the 13 custodians and matrons of the board's office building, 911 Locust street.

No attempt was made in the letter to say whether there were too many employes in any department, for lack of information on the question.

The largest change proposed was a reduction of the payroll for school custodians by $100,000, from about $600,000 to $500,000. This applied only to the men, not the matrons' force. It was left to the Building Commissioner to suggest whether the custodians' scale should be reduced uniformly or vary according to the work at different schools.

There are 346 custodians, assistants and substitutes on the payroll. This force has been regarded as a fruitful field for patronage for board members, although officials deny this.

"Janitors" Now "Custodians."

Eagleton commented on the change of title some years ago from "janitor" to "custodian." Some, he intimated, were superannuated and hence needed helpers. The letter called attention to the annual operating payroll approved recently for the new high school at Kingshighway and Arsenal street, amounting to $28,800, for engineers, firemen, custodians, matrons and gardeners.

Other proposed reductions and statements concerning them were:

Attendance division ("truant officers"), $23,000. The maximum salary would be made $1500 a year instead of $2000, as provided by the present scale of automatic annual increases. Attention was called to the assertion that this department was understaffed.

Drafting room, $20,000. The 11 employes are paid about $32,000 a year, but it was argued that no buildings are being erected requiring extensive drafting work now and that four draftsmen would suffice.

Superintendents of repairs and construction, $16,000. In addition to eliminating two jobs, other salaries would be cut.

Hygiene division, $13,000. Physicians serving as hygiene inspectors at the schools are paid from $1900 to $2775 a year, according to length of service, and are allowed to engage in private practice. The feeling was expressed that they should not be encouraged to remain in this work for long periods, but only as young men.

High school clerks, $11,000.

Transportation division, $11,000. Complaint was made that the chauffeurs, some receiving as much as $2400 a year, were overpaid.

Supply Department.

Supply Department, $9000. It was suggested that the salaries of several assistants as well as that of Commissioner Barr, were excessive.

Finance Department, $9000.

Custodians and matrons of the board building, $8000.

Educational museum and field house, $7500. It was asserted that the curator of the museum was overpaid at $4000 a year and that the job was worth about $150 a month.

Building Department office, $6600. It was suggested that salaries of F. A. Borgsteadt, Harry F. Schollmeyer and Philip C. Brante, assistants to Commissioner George W. Sanger, should be cut $500 or more each. They now receive $6000, $5500 and $5000, respectively.

Instruction Department office, $5000. Among those for whom pay cuts were urged and their present salaries were: C. M. Fraizer, chief clerk, $5000; Miss Fanny Donahoe, the superintendent's secretary, $3400; W. J. Hechinger, record clerk, $3480, and Fred Mees, teachers' clerk, $3480.

Executive division, $5000. Proportionate reductions were suggested for the eight employes, including George R. Johnson, director of tests and measurements, now paid $5500, and R. W. Hibbert, director of books, supplies and equipment at the same pay.

Miscellaneous employes (largely educational adjuncts), $5000.

Auditing Department, $2800.

Shops office, $1000.

Librarians at the teachers' colleges (three women), $1000.

PHARMACY TESTS LOOSELY CONDUCTED

Attorney-General's Aid Reports on Cheating in April Examinations.

By the Associated Press.

JEFFERSON CITY, June 19.—Assistant Attorney-General E. H. Miller reported to Gov. Stark today that evidence showed examinations given by the State Pharmacy Board in St. Louis April 26 and 27 were "loosely conducted, without adequate supervision."

Since requesting the investigation on which Miller's report was based, the Governor has announced he would not reappoint any present members of the board except W. H. Ellis, Vandalia, the chairman.

"The opportunities for cheating and the actual cheating were so widespread, it is difficult to believe the results of these examinations could fairly demonstrate the knowledge of at least a large portion of the applicants taking it," Miller said.

"It is true that 23 persons were failed for cheating, and that members of the board testified there was nothing unusual about the cheating at these examinations, and they feel that the persons who were passed deserve to pass," Miller added.

"However, the testimony of all the members of the board who testified was that the only cheating used as a basis for failure was cheating in the examination room, whereas a great deal of testimony of other witnesses showed cheating outside the examination room. It would seem to me that the testimony, taken all together, shows that the board was both inefficient and negligent in the conduct of these examinations."

ANOTHER SMART USED CAR BUYER

● "Buying a car, even though a used one, was a big event for me," says Ralph W. Kearns, retail produce merchant. "That's why I decided to play it safe right at the start and get a Dodge dealer's Blue Seal car. I knew that Blue Seal cars represent the very cream of Dodge dealers' trade-ins and that there'd be no question about their dependability. I found just the car I wanted and it actually cost me around $25 less than others were asking for cars of the same make.
"And, mind you, mine was a Blue Seal car triple-checked by the Dodge dealer for appearance, condition and price. It certainly is not hard to see why I am so enthusiastic, and why I don't hesitate a minute in saying that for a real bargain in a trustworthy used car the Dodge dealer just can't be beat."

BERLIN CHARGES SPANISH ATTACK ON PATROL SHIP

Protests Under Four-Power Pact, Alleging Submarine Tried to Torpedo Cruiser Leipsig.

CASE PRESENTED TO GOVERNMENTS

Retaliation Demand Considered — German Press Demands "Exemplary Measures" Be Taken.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, June 19.—Germany officially charged today that a Spanish Government submarine or submarines fired torpedoes at the Leipzig June 15 and 18 off Algeria, while the vessel was part of the international patrol fleet in the Mediterranean.

The German Ambassador to London, Joachim von Ribbentrop, was instructed to protest to the London Non-Intervention Committee, and Berlin newspapers demanded that the committee act immediately.

Representatives of Great Britain France and Italy agreed at a meeting in London today to consult their governments on Germany's demand for retaliation.

Von Ribbentrop gave representatives of the other powers the official German account of the attack at a meeting which adjourned to be resumed not later than Monday. He acted under the recent agreement which binds the four powers to submit facts of alleged incidents to each other without taking individual retaliatory action. Under it, an attack against one is considered an attack against all. Those who conferred with the German Ambassador were Anthony Eden, British Foreign Secretary; Charles Corbin, French Ambassador, and Dino Grandi, Italian Ambassador.

Official Statement.

The Admiralty Office announced: "It will now be the business of the four Powers to take appropriate measures in accordance with the agreements they have made.

"Germany refuses to watch idly the habit of Spanish Bolshevist submarine pirates until they make a hit."

The Admiralty Office said that in the first attack, torpedoes were sent against the warship three times within 30 minutes, the first two at one-minute intervals. None struck the Leipzig.

The first attack was made north of Oran, Algeria, the Leipzig commander reported.

The commander said the courses of all of the torpedoes were followed by the Leipzig's sound apparatus and that, in the second attack, the torpedo could be seen across the bows.

Berlin Press Vigorous.

The press here saw the "hand of Moscow" in the reported attack and declared powers which refrained from taking a definite stand against "Communist desperadoes" were jeopardizing world peace.

With news of the fall of Bilbao, one newspaper demanded, "What reasons can certain Powers now advance for withholding recognition of Francisco Franco (Spanish insurgent dictator) as a belligerent party?"

Italy and Portugal have granted Franco belligerent rights but Great Britain, France and other countries have not.

"The usual procedure of protest and complaint plainly is no longer effective," said the Tageblatt. "Exemplary measures are necessary."

The Lokal Anzeiger declared the German people "as one man will back any action the Government deems fit to take."

Spanish Minister of Defense Denies Torpedo Attack on the Leipzig.

By the Associated Press.

VALENCIA, Spain, June 19.—Indalecio Prieto, Minister of Defense, tonight denounced as "absolutely false" German charges that Spanish Government submarines had tried twice to torpedo the German light cruiser Leipzig.

Referring to the German assertions, the Ministry of Defense announced:

"In giving denial to this vile maneuver, the Minister does so not only on his ministerial responsibility but also on his personal honor, which he will never compromise even for reasons of state."

NAZI WARNING TO READ PAPERS

Judge Tells Defendants "Then You Will Know What to Do."

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, June 19.—The current issue of the official law journal, "Deutsche Justiz," cites several cases in which the plea, "I hadn't read the papers, so didn't know," was of no avail.

Some who so pleaded were young men who neglected to present themselves for military service. Others had overlooked an order to deliver up "forbidden literature." All were punished as first offenders with small fines, coupled with a fatherly admonition from the Judge: "In future, read the papers regularly; then you will know just where you stand, what to do, and what to avoid."

The Browns climaxed a three-game winning streak by staging a free-for-all with the Senators. Bill Knickerbocker and Al Simmons topped the card with a spirited one-round battle which was declared a draw.

Other players took a hand but their efforts were overshadowed by the main event. The Browns, who have been eating butcher's meat or something, have just begun to fight.

We have always been a bit skeptical about the belligerent propensities of the lowly worm when pushed too far, but maybe there is something in it after all.

And bump right smack into Max Schmeling, which won't be so good either.

Don't sell Jim Braddock short. He has grown 1¼ inches in the last three years.

A man is not supposed to grow after he has reached the age of 28 but maybe Jimmy is getting his second growth, along with his second wind.

Maybe it is just another of those "tall" stories that frequently come out of training camps.

"Navin Field Ushers to Be Made Deputies."

The Tigers must be heading for the last roundup.

Hank Greenberg was out for nearly a season with a broken wrist and Ray Hayworth is now on the sidelines with a similar injury. Indicating that those boys ought to keep a wrist watch on their wrists.

The Giants' upward surge dates from that memorable "battle of the balk" in St. Louis. Incidentally the Cardinals surged right along with them.

Madison Square lost for the second time in the United States Court of Appeals by what was practically a t. k. o. It was a 2-1 verdict and it is doubtful that the Garden will answer the bell for the final round in the Supreme Court.

BURNING STAR SECOND, DELLOR RUNS THIRD IN $25,400 EVENT

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 19.—The man who owns the largest ranch in the world, Robert J. Kleburg, of Texas, sent his star filly, Dawn Play, out to Washington Park today to win the $25,000 added American Derby.

So, while 28,000 spectators cheered, the three-year-old daughter of Clock Tower-Gun Play, a granddaughter of Man O' War, conquered the best three-year-old colts still on four legs. Dawn Play's margin was three quarters of a length over the Shandon Farm's Burning Star, a 25 to 1 shot, and Burning Star was another two lengths in front of Dellor, owned by J. W. Parrish of Lexington, Ky.

Staggering home in fourth place was Case Ace, the heavily-played favorite, running as an entry with Mars Shield for Mrs. Ethel V. Mars of Chicago, owner of the famed Milky Way Stable. Dellor is the Kentucky sweetheart that is supposed to be able to run only when the track is slow or muddy.

Dawn Play, the third filly to win the American Derby in its 53 years of history, returned $9.60 to win, $7.40 to place and $5.00 to show. The place price on Burning Star was $20.60 with $9.60 to show. Dellor rewarded his backers with $9.00 for finishing third.

The big brown filly ran the mile and a quarter in 2:05, fast time considering the condition of the track, which was slightly less than good. She was ridden by Jockey Lester Balaski.

The crowd wagered $94,276 on the race.

Today's Derby had a gross value of $31,175 with $25,400 going to Owner Kleburg, whose 8500-acre ranch almost covers one corner of Texas.

This was the second consecutive time a filly has won the American Derby. Black Helen, owned by Col. Edward R. Bradley of Lexington, Ky., captured it in 1935. The race was not run last year. Modesty, another filly, won the first running in 1889.

The fractious Case Ace delayed the start, as is his custom, and Dawn Play also acted badly in the gate. Finally, with Case Ace placed on the outside, they were sent away in perfect alignment.

Jockey Al Robertson rushed Case Ace across his field and as they went by the stands, the Milky Way colt was out in front with the outsider, Grey Gold, in closest pursuit, and Dawn Play and Yellow Tulip also well up. Eagle Pass was away so slowly that he trailed the rest by many lengths.

It was Case Ace setting the pace around the turn with Grey Gold and Dawn Play keeping him company, a length back, lapped on each other. Dawn Play finally moved up on the outside to take second place as the field went into the far turn. Case Ace was out on top by a length as they headed for home, but the big filly from Texas was moving up rapidly with her long strides.

Dawn Play caught Case Ace shortly after the stretch was reached, and with the Milky Way colt through, the filly then had to turn back the challenges of Burning Star, which had saved ground and came with a rush on the rail, and Dellor, which closed fast on the outside.

Balaski went to work on Dawn Play, kept her in front by three quarters of a length with Burning Star second and Dellor two more lengths back for third. The tiring Case Ace just managed to save fourth money from the rush of Eagle Pass which was going fastest at the finish. Behind them struggled Grey Gold, Over the Top, Mars Shield, Sunset Trail and Yellow Tulip in that order.

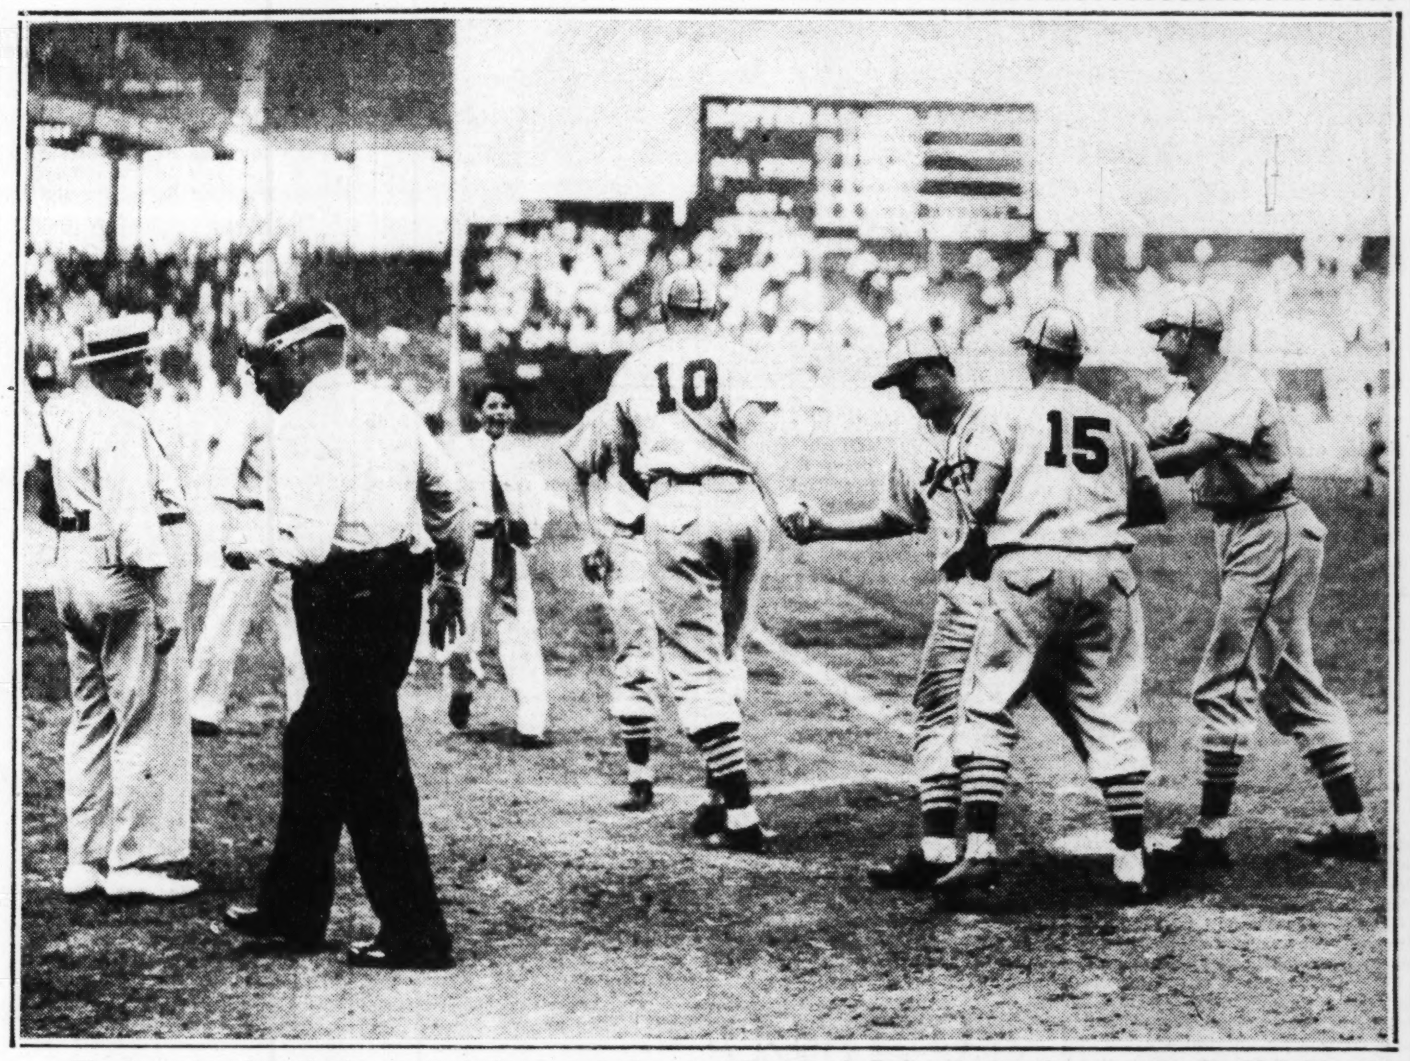
THREE JOCKEYS ARE SUSPENDED FOR ROUGH RIDING AT AQUEDUCT

NEW YORK, June 19. — The rough riding which has been prevalent during the present Aqueduct meeting finally came to a head here today when the stewards went on the warpath and suspended three jockeys for rough work.

Following the disqualification of G. D. Widener's Salian in the first race today, with W. D. Wright in the saddle, the officials set him down until July 10 for bumping and carrying out Strolling By.

Jockey Harry Richards received the same penalty for foul riding while astride Creole Maid, Mrs. W. M. Jeffords filly in the Astoria Stakes. Jockey L. Knapp was suspended until June 29 for rough riding in the third race, June 17.

MEDWICK'S NINTH-INNING HOME RUN WITH TWO RUNNERS ON BEATS BEES, 7-5



"Hap-py Days . . . Are Here Again . . ."

The joy and excitement of pennant-winning years broke out at Sportsman's Park yesterday afternoon when Joe Medwick won the game for the Cardinals, after two were out in the ninth. The Redbirds were one run behind and there were two men on bases when Joe rifled his second home run of the afternoon against the scoreboard at the back of the left field bleachers. It changed the score from 5-4 Boston to 7-5 Cardinals. This photograph shows how the crowd, man and boy, went wild, fans surging on the field before Medwick got around the bases. Among Cardinal players waiting to congratulate the majors' leading batsman are Johnny Mize (No. 10) and Jimmy Brown (No. 15). Charley Moran is the umpire.

CARDINAL SLUGGER HITS TWO 4-BAGGERS

Saves Game for Ryba in the Sixth, Tying the Score, and Wins for Winford—Lou Fette Driven Out of Box in Eighth.

By J. Roy Stockton

Bill McKechnie's Boston Bees were leading, 5 to 4, and a Ladies' day crowd of 10,000 men, women and children were very unhappy. For it was the ninth inning, two men were out and there didn't seem to be a chance. Hundreds of the cash and two-bit free-gate customers had given up and left the stands.

Little Jimmy Brown didn't give up, though. He battled with Jim Turner, the Bees' rescue pitcher, and finally hit a high bounder over the pitcher's head. Jimmy Brown is fast. He could hit an arrow upward and give Hiawatha a good sprint. And he beat out this infield bounder.

But there still were two out and the crowd kept on edging toward the exits. Don Padgett hadn't made a hit all day. But Turner pitched too carefully, threw three wide ones and the crowd took heart. But it kept edging toward the exits. Padgett took the next one, a strike and glanced at the dugout for instructions. If it was good, came the signal, take a crack at it. It was good, Padgett did take a crack at it and his line single to center sent the scampering Brown scurrying to third.

Two Pitches to Medwick.

And now there was a roar of expectation from the crowd. For that meant Joe Medwick, the Hungarian rhapsody, would have one more chance to swing his big war club. Joe rubbed a bit of resin lovingly on the business end of the bludgeon, took his stance carefully and measured his bat against the far corner of the plate.

Turner threw a pitch inside. Joe would have swung at that in the eagerness of a crisis a few years ago. But Joe has learned something about batting. He let it pass, and measured his bat again, against the far corner of the plate. Turner pitched once more. Only once. It was in there, in the vernacular of the diamond. It was in there, and then, presto, it was out there.

That business end of the bat, that Medwick had rubbed so affectionately with a bit of resin, had met the ball squarely in the middle and the ball was sailing merrily on its way. Out it soared over the head of Left-Fielder Johnson. Far above Johnson. It cleared the bleacher walls. It cleared the heads and the outstretched arms of the sun seat customers and, as it crashed against the scoreboard where it tells of the double-header that will be played on this same Sportsman's Park battleground this afternoon, a bedlam of cheers broke from the stands.

Three Runs Come Home.

A little girl in turquoise blue—or maybe it wasn't turquoise blue, for we get many complaints from the family color department that we don't know our pastels—jumped from a front row box, down beyond the Cardinal dugout and jumped up and down in her glee. And she kept on dancing as Joe jogged around the bases, behind the scampering Jimmy Brown and loping Don Padgett, turning that impending defeat into a glorious 7 to 5 victory.

The little girl in turquoise blue—

Louis Eases Up in Semifinal Workout With 2 Sparmates

By W. J. McGoogan.
Of the Post-Dispatch Sports Staff.

KENOSHA, Wis., June 19.—Joe Louis boxed four rounds with two sparring partners two with each here this afternoon in his next-to-last workout before he climbs in the ring to battle Jim Braddock for the heavyweight championship Tuesday night.

Those who had not seen Louis in previous practice sessions were surprised at what they considered the poor form displayed by the Brown Bomber against two mediocre spar mates, Tiger Hairston and George Nicholson. But others who had watched him for more than a week declared that he appeared greatly improved.

There was no question but that he was taking it easy against the two men and he appeared not at all anxious to use his right hand. He snapped home punches with his left but he was also hit several times with right hand blows.

Nicholson Tags the Bomber.

CHICAGO, June 19.

"I HOPE Braddock wins, but—" seems to voice the majority opinion of fight followers, here from all corners of the world to view the battle for the title between Champion James J. Braddock and his Negro opponent at Comiskey Park next Tuesday.

The facts about both men are all at hand. Both are in fine physical shape. Their records are open to the world. The story of past successes or failures is spread on the guide books.

There would seem to be nothing to prevent anyone from forming a conclusion as to the outcome of what, it is hoped, will be another "million dollar" battle.

And yet the forecasters who formerly rushed in where angels would not venture are today cagey about expressing an opinion.

Normally they would favor Louis. In him we find youth, weight, speed and two-handed punching power. In all physical particulars except height he is superior to Braddock. Nevertheless there are still many fight observers here, careful critics, who are uncertain that Louis, with all his assets, will be the winner.

Odds About 2 1-2 to 1.

THIS writer extended his poll of critics by adding the views of newcomers to the 16 to 4 total in favor of Louis previously recorded. Of 40 writers here to cover the battle, 28 favored Louis and 12 Braddock.

In nearly every case Louis supporters expected him to win by a knockout whereas Braddock's followers in many cases thought he would outpoint his foeman.

Apparently, the Braddock group believes that this will be a victory of mind over matter. On every hand you hear

Armstrong Picks Joe Louis to Win Within 7 Rounds

HENRY ARMSTRONG, St. Louis Negro, recognized in his adopted State, California, as the featherweight champion of the world, picks Joe Louis to knock out Champion Jimmy Braddock within seven rounds of their fight Tuesday night.

Armstrong, who is visiting his relatives here in St. Louis, will depart for Chicago tomorrow and after seeing the title bout there, will go on to New York for a fight in Madison Square Garden, July 8, probably with Al Shaft, the new Australian lightweight.

"I think Louis will win because he's younger and has more stamina," Armstrong said. "I believe it will be a good thing for boxing, too, since promoters will be looking for a 'white hope' to take the title away from Joe and that ought to stimulate the boxing game."

HELEN HICKS WINS, 6 AND 5, IN GOLF FINAL

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, June 19.—Helen Hicks, stocky New York professional with a flair for sensational putting, won the women's Western open golf championship this afternoon.

Miss Hicks defeated Beatrice Barrett, Minneapolis amateur star, 6 and 5, over 36 holes, despite a late comeback during which Miss Barrett trimmed the new champion's advantage from seven to four holes at the last turn.

It was Miss Hicks' first championship since she turned professional. She earned her way to the final during a week of gruelling matches, but was never seriously in danger of elimination.

Today's match, which Miss Barrett lost mostly because of shaky putting, was featured by a streak of sensational shotmaking during which Miss Hicks scored birdies on the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth holes of the first round.

MONTE WEAVER BATTED OUT IN NINTH; WEST DRIVES IN RUN

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—In the lull after the opening game storm of fist fights, Washington's Senators staged an eighth-inning rally today to push across a run and defeat the Browns by a 2 to 1 score.

It was a heart breaker for Rookie Julio Bonetti to lose. The youthful Italian hurled a courageous game, holding the hard hitting Senators to seven hits, but he scattered them less widely than the veteran Monte Weaver, who was credited with the victory. Weaver, however, required help to quell a ninth inning uprising by the Browns.

Entering the ninth trailing by one run, the Browns were given new hope when Rookie Benny Huffman singled to center. Manager Rogers Hornsby decided not to play for a tie and to sink or swim by hitting straight away. He ordered Tommy Carey to hit instead of sacrificing and the little second baseman flied out.

Hornsby got a tough break when he sent Ethan Allen to bat for Bonetti. The pinch-hitter caught one of Weaver's fast balls and rammed it down the third base line. It had "hit" written all over it but Buddy Lewis made a beautiful stab of the ball and two were out.

Southpaw Stops West.

With the 5000 fans starting for the exits, Harry Davis injected a new note of hope when he singled Huffman to third and with West facing Weaver the Hornsby men seemed to stand a fairly good chance. After Sammy had fouled off the first pitch, however, Weaver was yanked for the left-handed Carl Fischer, who made West pop to second base, ending the game.

The Browns and Bonetti got a tough break in the third inning when a freak play robbed them of at least one run.

Bonetti opened the frame with a single and Davis sent him to second with a blow to left. West sacrificed them into scoring position and Vosmik lashed what seemed destined for a single to center. The drive struck Weaver on the leg, however and the pitcher managed to recover in time to throw out Bonetti at the plate. Then he got Beau Bell on a fly to end the inning.

In their half of the third the Senators pushed across the first run when, with two out, Bonetti walked Johnny Stone and pitched a triple to Fred Sington.

Base Hits at Premium.

Not until the seventh were the Browns able to score. Then Tommy Carey led off with a single. Bonetti, attempting to sacrifice, fouled to Catcher Rick Ferrell and Davis popped to shortstop. West, however, came through with a whistling triple off the right field fence, tying the score at 1-1.

Stone opened the eighth inning, when the Senators shoved across what proved to be the game winning run. He doubled off the fence, took third on Sington's sacrifice, and raced across as Bonetti was chasing Buddy Myer's soft roller and throwing him out.

Tomorrow will be Benny Huffman day at Griffith Stadium. Two thousand Shenandoah Valley folks will invade the capital to honor the young Brownie catcher, who hails from Luray, Va., and who used to play for Bridgewater College. He will be presented with a gift before the game.

Griffith recommended leniency for Knickerbocker and Simmons, but he was vehement against Hildebrand, whom he branded as a chronic "bean baller." "That's the fellow against whom action should be taken," Griffith told Harridge.

Beating Bonetti—And Stopping the Browns

—Associated Press Wirephoto.

Julio Bonetti of the Browns needed runs badly in his game at Washington yesterday. Julio singled off Monte Weaver to start the third inning and got around to third on a one-bagger by Harry Davis and a sacrifice. Then Joe Vosmik smashed a drive that hit Weaver on the leg. The Senator pitcher recovered the ball in time to throw to Cat cher Rick Ferrell, who is shown retiring Bonetti. However, the Browns lost, 2 to 1.

Medwick's Homer in Ninth Wins for Cards, 7 to 5

if it was turquoise blue—was Mr. Joseph Michael Medwick's bride of less than a year and nobody blamed her for dancing.

It was Joe's second home run of the afternoon. All the girls at Mary Institute, where Joe found Isabel, would be talking about it. And didn't she have reason to be proud and to dance and to grin through the tears of happiness? It was only a ball game, only a home run, but then it isn't every girl that catches a boy like that, who can hit home runs against score boards and change gloom into joy for a ladies' day crowd of 10,000 men, women and children.

Hits Homer in Sixth Inning.

One man was on base when Joe hit his first home run in the sixth inning and so his two mighty wallops drove five Cardinal runs over the plate. Five runs of the Cardinal seven. Yes, it was quite an afternoon for the slugging son of Carteret, N. J.

It was an old-fashioned thriller that Medwick's bat won for the Redbirds, to enable them to keep pace with the leading Cubs, who won, and to gain a full game on the Giants and Pirates, who lost.

Warstler's single and Cuccinello's double produced a Boston run in the first inning and in their half the Cards tied it up on Pepper Martin's double and Brown's single.

Boston went ahead again with two in the third on Fette's single and English's home run, but the Cards drew even in the sixth when Medwick hit his first four-bagger.

Ryba Driven Out in Seventh.

Then in the seventh Mike Ryba, nudged by a couple of hits, was knocked out of the box as the Bees took a two-run lead. Fletcher popped a single to left just out of Durocher's reach and after Lopez sacrificed, Fette scored Fletcher with a pop single to center and took second on the throw to the plate. English singled to left, moving Fette to third, and when Warstler singled to center, Fette scored and Ray Harrell relieved Ryba.

Durocher's double and Pepper Martin's single gave the Cards a run in the seventh and Jim Winford took over the pitching and was credited with the victory. But it really wasn't much of a victory for anybody, except for that little girl in the turquoise blue—if it was turquoise blue. Anyhow it wasn't pink and it wasn't Spanish tile.

RED BIRD NOTES

Dizzy Dean and Lon Warneke will pitch against the Bees this afternoon in a double-header which concludes the series. Dizzy will be trying for his tenth victory while Warneke will be seeking his No. 8. Dizzy has lost five and Warneke two.

Manager Bill McKechnie of the Bees declined to name his pitchers for the games today. Frank Gabler, obtained from the Giants in the Walter Berger deal, is about due to make his bow as a Bee, and Guy Bush may work.

The Ladies' Day game of the series attracted 3246 cash customers, 5012 women and 1595 boys and girls.

It was a warm day and the umpires left their coats in the clubhouse. With no coat pockets in which to keep a supply of baseballs, Umpire Moran delegated the announcer to throw in a new ball whenever necessary.

Gutteridge tried to steal in the second and Pepper Martin in the third, but Lopez threw them out.

Crowd of 30,000 Sees Mauri Rose Win Auto Race

LANGHORNE, Pa., June 19.—Mauri Rose of Columbus, O., won the feature 50-mile auto race at the Langhorne mile dirt track today, nosing out Billy Winn of Detroit, before a crowd of 30,000. Rose's time was 33 minutes 6:42 seconds, setting a new record for the track.

Rose, driving the car of Frankie Bailey of New Brunswick, N. J., who was injured in the opening meet last season, won in an exciting finish after taking the lead on the forty-eighth lap. Winn had the lead for 38 miles before Rose caught up with him and waged a neck-and-neck race for 10 miles.

Ben Shaw of Westville, N. J., who made the fastest time in the qualifying time trials, finished third, after he encountered engine trouble.

Americus Polli Hurls Second No-Hit Game

By the Associated Press.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., June 19.—For the second time in his long career, Americus Polli "made" baseball's Hall of Fame today with a no-hit no-run pitching performance.

Blanking the Jersey Giants without a hit, the 33-year-old righthander, who failed to make the major league grade in trials with the New York Yankees and St. Louis Browns, hurled the Montreal Royals to a 6-to0 victory in the first game of an Internataional League doubleheader.

Although he walked eight batters, he fanned two and did not allow a runner to reach second base after Ernie Smith, who had walked, stole second in the first inning.

Polli's previous no-hit performance was recorded in 1935, when, as a member of the Milwaukee Brewers of the American Association, he blanked St. Paul.

Yacht Ranger Outsails Yankee For Third Time

By the Associated Press.

NEWPORT, R. I., June 19.—Harold S. Vanderbilt's Ranger, the only undefeated Class J sloop in the world, today continued her triumphal course toward nomination as the defender of the America's Cup by leading Gerard B. Lambert's Yankee home seven minutes and three seconds.

The race was sailed over a triangular course of 27.7 miles. The first 10-mile leg of which, a broad reach, furnished the only serious competition.

Yankee led Ranger to the first mark by a precarious 10-second margin, but there advantage was thrown away, for Yankee sagged off so sharply that Ranger promptly gained the weather berth for the ensuing 9.2-mile beat to windward.

Windward work repeatedly has proved Yankee's poorest point of sailing and the race was stowed in Ranger's locker when she turned the second mark, a buoy off Sakonet, five minutes and 45 seconds ahead of the veteran of the 1930 and 1934 cup campaigns.

Ranger added more than a minute to her lead on the final 8.5-mile leg, another broad reach, but the wind was lightening and that largely accounted for the time increase in her margin of victory.

Ranger, which Vanderbilt built out of his own pocket, now has won all five of her starts since she went down the ways at Bath, Me., this spring. Today's was her third victory over Yankee in match races. She led Chandler Hovey's Rainbow and Yankee home in a three-cornered contest and also whipped Rainbow in a match race.

Tomorrow the Vanderbilt boat will meet Rainbow, the sloop he sailed to victory over the British challenger, T. O. M. Sopwith's Endeavour, in 1934.

WHITE SOX WIN FROM YANKS IN NINTH ON HOMER BY KREEVICH

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 19.—Thornton Lee today scored his fourth straight victory over the Yankees when the White Sox rallied in the ninth inning for four runs and a 5-to-2 decision.

The high point of the uprising was a home run by Kreevich with two on after a previous run had tied the score.

Lee was lifted for a pinch-hitter and Brown hurled the last frame, the two conspiring to hold the Yanks to eight hits. Ruffing allowed nine hits in being charged with his second defeat against six victories.

Laab's Homer and Triple Help Tigers Beat Athletics.

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, June 19. — Chet Laabs hit a home run and a triple today to drive in five runs and lead the Tigers to an 8-6 victory over the Athletics.

With the Tigers two runs behind in the fifth, Laabs hit his circuit blow with two aboard to put Detroit in front 6-5. In the ninth, after Bill Werber's sixth-inning single had tied the score, Laabs tripled with two mates on base for the winning runs.

The Tigers made 13 hits off three Philadelphia pitchers, while the A's made nine off two hurlers. It was the Athletics' fifth straight defeat. Frankie Hayes hit a homer for the A's in the fourth.

SOCCER BODY TAKES CHARGE OF REFEREES; OFFICERS RE-ELECTED

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, June 19.—Delegates to the United States Football Association's twenty-fourth annual convention left for home today after the quietest meeting in the association's history.

Even the election of officers was uneventful, all being re-elected without any opposition. Joseph Triner, of Chicago, chairman of the Illinois State Athletic Commission, which is handling the details of the Joe Louis—Jimmy Braddock fight for the heavyweight championship, was en route by airplane after being re-elected president.

Others re-elected were: Harold S. Callohill, Baltimore, first vice-president; D. Hugh MacDonald, Kearney, N. J., second vice-president; Thomas E. Sager, Philadelphia, third vice-president; William T. Angus, Cleveland, treasurer.

Next year's convention was awarded to New York City.

Only one important change was made in the constitution. The convention voted to sever relations with the United States Soccer Association. The two bodies have worked in accord for 22 years. A special committee was appointed by president Joseph Triner to draft a plan by which referees will work under control instead of in conjunction with state associations.

HAFEY'S HOMER BEATS GIANTS AND LIFTS REDS OUT OF CELLAR

By the Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, June 19.—The Reds combined Paul Derringer's three-hit pitching with a pair of timely home runs today to whip the Giants, 4 to 2, and climb out of the National League cellar for the first time since May 24.

Turning in his best pitching performance of the season, Derringer was in trouble only once, in the fifth inning, when Mel Ott's eleventh homer of the year, with a mate on base, accounted for both of the Giants' runs.

Although he fanned only one batter, he did not walk any, to best Clyde Castleman in a pitching duel, give the Reds their second straight over the Giants in the current series, and post his second triumph of the season.

A homer by Ival Goodman started the Reds' scoring in the third, but Chick Hafey's round-trip blow, with Phil Weintraub aboard and one out in the eighth inning, broke up the ball game.

French Pitches Cubs to 2-1 Victory Over Phils.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 19.—The Cubs clung tenaciously to the National League leadership today when Larry French pitched them to a 2-to-1 victory over Philadelphia.

More than 11,000 fans saw French best Wayne La Master in a pitchers' duel with each allowing four hits.

For less than one hour and a half, French and La Master vied for honors with Larry emerging the victor on the strength of his best-pitched game of the season.

La Master gave up no more hits than French, but three of the four Cub blows occurred in the same inning to give them all the runs they could make in one afternoon.

French, winning his fourth game of the season, was never in difficulty, except when Dolph Camilli slashed his eleventh home run of the year into the left center field bleachers.

SAN ROM

EACH CLOCKED AT 4:07.2, NEAR WORLD RECORD, AT PRINCETON

Time Is Second Only to Cunningham's World Mark of 4:06.7—He Finishes Third.

By the Associated Press.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 19. — Archie San Romani, lightweight runner from Kansas State Teachers College, and Don Lash, flyer from Indiana University, today furnished proof on the cinder track of Princeton's Palmer Stadium that they are ready to carry on the mile running burden when Glenn Cunningham decides to ease it off his shoulders.

Timed jointly in 4:07.2, for the second fastest mile ever run, they beat Cunningham by two yards as San Romani edged out his Hoosier rival by the proverbial whisker in the feature event of Princeton's fourth invitation meet before an alumni day crowd of over 20,000.

It was, in fact, less than a whisker that separated the 130-pound Kansan from the 145-pound Indianan. Officials said Lash, as they came pounding down to the tape turned his head the slightest bit. That twist pulled him up for a fraction—the fraction by which he was beaten.

Venzke Sets Pace.

But San Romani, Lash and Cunningham, whose time of 4:07.4 made this the fastest three-man finish ever recorded, allowed a vote of thanks to Gene Venzke, the lone entrant to "withdraw."

Gene withdrew after setting a terrific three-quarter mile pace that gave him a lead of 40 yards over Lash when he pulled up at the start of the final lap. Venzke had been aiming at the world record of 3:00.6 for the three-quarters held by Jules Ladoumegue of France.

He missed it by eight tenths of a second. Yet, if it hadn't been for Venzke, San Romani and Lash would not have come nearly so close to Cunningham's world record time of 4:06.7, set on this same track four years ago.

At 440 yards, where he was clocked in 58.6, Venzke had a four-yard lead on Lash, with Luigi Becalli, who finished fourth, third and Cunningham and San Romani bringing up the rear.

Steeplechase Record Set.

On the back stretch of the second lap, Lash moved up to within a yard of the leader, only to have Venzke spurt away again. San Romani and Cunningham came up with Lash going into the final turn. San Romani and Lash pulled away in the last 50 yards, and Cunningham easily distanced Becalli.

Only one record was set in the seven events. Floyd Lochner, blond endurance star from Agra, Okla., cut one and two tenths seconds from his own American mark for two-mile steeplechase with a 9:59.3 performance.

SAN ROMANI HAIR-LINE VICTOR OVER LASH IN MILE RACE

Time Is Second Only to Cunningham's World Mark of 4:06.7—He Finishes Third.

On the back stretch of the second lap, Lash moved up to within a yard of the leader, only to have Venzke spurt away again. San Romani and Cunningham came up with Lash going into the final turn. San Romani and Lash pulled away in the last 50 yards, and Cunningham easily distanced Becalli.

BRADDOCK IN GOOD HUMOR AS HE TAKES LAST HARD WORKOUT

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

GRAND BEACH, Mich., June 19.—A confident James J. Braddock went through his final boxing paces today in preparation for defense of his heavyweight title against Joe Louis at Comiskey Park next Tuesday night.

Snapping out of the slump that had marked his more recent workouts, Braddock worked two rounds each with Jack McCarthy and Charley Massera and showed himself in excellent shape. Whatever happens next Tuesday evening, Braddock will have no excuses.

The champion devoted most of his training session today to sharpening his left hand and perfecting his in-fighting. Tomorrow, his final day of training, will be devoted to tapering off. He will not don the gloves again until approximately 10 p. m., Tuesday.

Braddock weighed 197 after the workout and did not draw a heavy breath. His legs, which are the questionmarks in this scheduled 15-round battle, appeared in splendid condition.

Braddock, unwilling to answer questions yesterday, was more genial today. He declared that he never felt better for a fight in his career and that he was certain of victory. He added:

"Joe Louis should do some worrying today. It was a year ago tonight that Max Schmeling knocked him out. I'm not worried a bit."

TROLLEY LEAGUERS OF THE 90'S HOLD REUNION NEXT WEEK

President Robert Fisher of Trolley League has arranged with officials of Edgemont Athletic Club Inc., of East St. Louis to hold a gala reunion of old-time trolley league players next Sunday at State Street Park who saw service in the semipro circuit back in early 90's.

The reunion will be held in conjunction with regular league game between Edgemont and Maryland Heights two teams fighting for first place.

JUNIOR TENNIS MEET TO START TOMORROW

Thirty-nine junior tennis players entered the St. Louis district tennis event to be played on the Lewis Park Courts in University City starting at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning. Bud Blattner, state high school champion, leads the seeded list, followed by James Johnson, Dave Ferriss and Henry Tieber. No boys' entrants were seeded.

The girls' singles event as well as the junior doubles tourney will not begin until Tuesday afternoon. Entries for both these meets are still open.

ner three times with his right. His punches, however, didn't carry much steam and he seemed to let up on the third one for fear, perhaps, of causing Louis some embarrassment.

Through it all, though, Joe merely moved about slowly, using his left to the head and paying little attention to what was going on. You got the idea that he was slightly bored with the whole proceedings, for not once did he open up with a flash.

Once or twice it seemed as though he was going to start the finishing proceedings against Nicholson, a big, rather ungainly Negro, but each time that he did, he appeared to change his mind.

In the two rounds against Hairston he was careful not to let anything go which would do any damage and Hairston gave him very little work until the close of the second round, when, just for a moment, he hit Louis with a right hand, over that left of Joe's, just the way Max Schmeling did just one year ago tonight.

If Joe had any sad remembrances of that unhappy occasion, for him, he didn't show it.

Won't Name Round.

Before he went into the ring he simply said that he was confident of defeating Braddock, but when someone asked him if he was ready to name the round, he said he couldn't do that in this fight although he was reported to have said yesterday that he would finish Jim probably in the first round.

Tomorrow, Louis is to box four more rounds as his final preparation but he will not leave here to go into Chicago until Tuesday morning when he will go by a special car from Zion City. Where he will stay in Chicago is unknown except that it will not be a hotel, but likely the apartment of some friend.

Just as Joe entered the ring he stopped to shake hands with a musician who has been bed-ridden for three years as the result of injuries in an automobile accident. He was brought to the training site in an automobile and placed on a cot where he could see Joe work.

There were more than 1000 persons in the high school stadium to watch the workout.

Army Wins Polo Title Second Time

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—Frustrated in the final round the last two years, Army's hard-riding polo team walloped Cornell, 10 to 6, today to capture the intercollegiate championship.

Favored for the title in 1935 and 1936 and beaten each time, first by Yale and then by Harvard, the Cadets finally came through today and, at the same time, avenged their defeat by Cornell in the final of the 1936 indoor championship.

A crowd of 5000 jammed Morris Memorial Field on Governor's Island for the game, played as a feature of the tercentenary celebration of the purchase of the island from the Indians by the Dutch.

TEAM TITLE IN N. C. A. A. TRACK MEET RETAINED BY TROJANS

By the Associated Press.

BERKELEY, Cal., June 19.—University of Southern California's Trojans successfully defended its team championship today in the National Collegiate A. A. track and field championships, scoring 62 points.

Stanford was second with 50 points and Ohio State third with 28. Columbia scored 21 and Indiana University and Washington State College 20 each.

Individual scoring honors went to Ben Johnson, Columbia University Negro who won the 220-yard dash and took second in the 100 for 18 points in all. Jack Weiershauser, Stanford, had 16 and Rice of Notre Dame 14.

Other team points were: Kansas Teachers (Pittsburgh) 17, Michigan 16, Notre Dame 15, and Wisconsin 12; Georgia 11, Boston College 10, Pittsburgh 10, Kansas Teachers (Emporia) 10, and University of California at Los Angeles 10; San Jose State 10, California 10, Drake 10, Nebraska 10, Wayne 8, Colorado 8, Idaho 8, Oregon 8, and Michigan State 7; Temple 6, Kansas State 6, Georgia Tech 4, Washington 4, Maryland 4, and Purdue 4; Minnesota 4, Kentucky 3, Rice Institute 2, Illinois 2, Texas 1½, Marquette 1½ and Duke 1.

Three Meet Records Broken.

Three meet records were broken. The Trojan squad, upholding the championship traditions of earlier Dean Cromwell-coached teams, took only two first places but displayed a well-balanced team.

Meet records were established in the half-mile by Johnny Woodruff, of Pittsburgh; the two-mile run by Gregory Rice of Notre Dame, and in the pole vault by Bill Sefton of Southern California.

Woodruff, long-legged Negro who won the 1936 Olympic 800 meters championship, charged into the lead at 200 yards and won as he pleased in 1:50.3. The old record was 1:50.9 set in 1933 by Charles Hornbostel of Indiana. Rice's two-mile time of 9:14.2 compared with the former record of 9:16.7 set by Charles Shugert of Miami in 1932.

Sefton, already co-holder of the unofficial world's vault record, set a new meet mark by clearing 14 feet 8⅞ inches. His teammate, Earle Meadows, and George Varoff of Oregon, each cleared 14 feet 4⅞ inches but Varoff received first place by making the vault on his first try. The former N C A A record was 14 feet ¾ inches set last year by Sefton and Meadows.

WRAY'S COLUMN

that a punch can upset Louis' mental line of communications, that he fails to function when hurt. That has seemed to happen in the past.

And right here is where the clairvoyants enter the field of guessing. They guess that a 31-year-old fighter who has been out of the ring for two years, who is known to have hands that have gone back on him at times, and who at best is a one-handed puncher, is able to concede all handicaps and "think" his way to victory.

Our judgment is that even a clever man can't outthink a faster and harder two-handed hitter for 15 rounds. Inevitably he will be hurt. Even the brainiest of boxers can't outthink a blow under the heart or a swat on the chin.

If good wishes can do Jim any good, he ought to have a chance. But in the light of evidence, Joe Louis will have to be given the call.

It Happened Before.

"THIS is an anniversary," remarked the smiling Joe Jacobs, who represents Max Schmeling's interests in this country. "It was just a year ago that Max Schmeling did something that none of you guys believed was possible. He stopped Joe Louis. Why do you find it so impossible for history to repeat itself? Braddock is a darned good fighter with lots of insides."

So what, we asked. Do you pick him to beat Louis and do you expect him to be Max's next opponent?

"Well, not exactly that," was the Jacobs view. "I like Braddock, but I think Louis will knock him out in about nine rounds—maybe earlier."

"Perhaps my opinion is biased. I want Louis to win. If they ever do get to the point where they will give Schmeling a shot at the title, I'd prefer Louis as his opponent. Max can beat him again. Besides, Louis would draw more against Max than Braddock would."

Incidentally, most of the fight world is interested in a Louis-Schmeling return bout, even though anti-Nazi opinion in the United States is hostile to Schmeling. We are still wondering if Louis is dumb enough to again push his jaw up against that smashing right hand, round after round, without having perfected a defense.

No Million Dollar Gate?

ALTHOUGH heavy advance sales have been reported, few forecasters, even among the officials, seem certain that the fabled total of $1,000,000 will be reached when the gate receipts are all in next Tuesday.

Estimates now look for a gross of around $800,000. Early uncertainty as to the holding of the contest and the overwhelming odds at first quoted against Braddock have contributed to keep down the total. There has been a late rush at the box office, however, and it seems to indicate a growing faith in Braddock.

No doubt there will be a heavy day-of-the-fight sale if the weather turns out fine on Tuesday. Otherwise many fans, knowing they can tune in their radio sets and hear Clem McCarthy and Ed Hills tell about it, will save the ticket price and possible inconvenience due to the crowd and perhaps unfavorable weather.

It is not overstating it much to estimate the radio broadcast will keep away one in every six or seven interested persons. Today a ringside ticket price of $27.50 swings a lot of weight. And, although the seats in Comiskey Park are all considered good, many would prefer to hear the broadcast to sitting in the grandstand and viewing the event via field glasses.

It's just one of those things which confronts promoters of big events today.

And the Referee.

THE Illinois State Athletic Commission has named five men as eligibles for the job of refereeing the title fight. The man selected probably knows it now; but the fact is not communicated to the public as yet.

Comment favors Phil Collins or Dave Miller—both capable men who enjoy the public confidence.

Referees in heavyweight title fights are under much greater pressure than normally; a title today can roughly be capitalized at a million dollars. To take the crown from one man and hand it to another is serious business.

The no-foul rule relieves the officials of one load. That is because if a fighter should claim a foul due to a low blow, it would have no weight. Schmeling won his title that way and the no-foul rule now prevailing was the result.

Nevertheless, there is another angle. The protector may not protect. A fighter deliberately might hit an opponent low. In that case the no-foul rule can't possibly operate. It therefore still may be put up to a referee to decide whether a disabling low blow was landed accidentally or intentionally.

That is difficult to decide. As between accident or intent, as concerns a blow delivered in the heat of fighting, is too much for most officials.

It Always Happens.

THE no-foul rule concerns low blows, chiefly. But there are many other forms of fouls which an official must consider. In most heavyweight title fights they don't pass on them—they merely pass them up, ignore them.

Many fouls have been committed in championships, some of sufficient importance as to result in disqualification, under ordinary cricumstances. I can still see the immortal Jack Dempsey as he stood poised over the fallen Wild Bull of the Pampas, Luis Firpo, whom he had knocked down in the second round of their fight.

Dempsey had no business there. By all laws of fair play he should have been walking toward a neutral corner. But not only did he not back up, but our recollection of what followed is that he socked Firpo with a knockout blow before the fighter was able to straighten up.

The same fighting eagerness and disregard of fighting rules was later, here in Chicago, to cost Dempsey a knockout victory over Tunney.

There are other real and important fouls possible in fights than mere low blows. There is butting, for example. That's one of the most dangerous of all forms of fouling. A losing fighter's head may open a gash above the eye of a foe who was on his way to victory—and then what? It's still the referee's task to decide whether the butt was intentional or accidental. Certainly the victim should not be made to suffer for another's offense—accidental or not. And yet, it could happen in the coming fight—or any other—one million dollars might be butted right out of a deserving boxer's grasp!

As far as this writer is concerned, the no-foul rule has no standing. Fighters should be compelled under threat of disqualification to keep their blows in legal territory and to observe all the laws of the game, at their own peril if they forget.

Rules were made for that. Now they want to make foolproof rules to fit all conditions. Give us a good referee and let the old rules stand. Commission regulation will never make boxing foulproof.

OATMAN BEATS ADAMS IN STATE GOLF FINAL, 2-1

By the Associated Press.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., June 19.—Tall, lean, 20-year-old Ted Adams of Columbia, Kirksville and St. Louis, whittled down to nothing a five-hole lead held by Glenn Oatman of Lawrence, Kan., representing Swope Park of Kansas City, midway in the afternoon round of their 36-hole final match of the Missouri amateur golf championship today, but it was the diminutive Kansan, the smallest man in the meet, who took the crown.

The score was 2 and 1, which fails to tell of the courageous, uphill battle staged by the black-haired Adams, son of E. R. Adams of Columbia, Assistant State Superintendent of Schools.

Both finalists were out in 71, one under par, this morning, but Adams blew himself to a fat 40 going out this afternoon as Oatman stroked a par 36. Adams was one under for the last eight holes.

James Benson of St. Louis lost to William Cormany of St. Joseph, 3 and 2, in the final of the consolation flight, and Bert McDowell Sr. of Kansas City defeated Fred Hemker of St. Louis, 6 and 5, in the final of the senior flight.

Budge Odds-On Favorite to Win Wimbledon Title After Crushing Austin in Queens Club Final

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, June 19.—Don Budge, American Red terror of the courts, handed Henry Wilfred (Bunny) Austin, England's greatest amateur, an unmerciful 6-1, 6-2, beating in the Queen's tennis tournament final today and was immediately installed an odds-on favorite for the all-England championship starting at Wimbledon Monday.

Seldom has a star of Austin's standing absorbed so crushing a defeat in full view of the public. After watching Budge finish off the match with his fifth love game, one of England's foremost tennis authorities shook his head in amazement and said:

"I never expected to see the day when anybody would do that to Bunny. Well, that just means Budge has to wait 13 days to take the Wimbledon championship officially.

2 to 3 Odds.

Five minutes after the lanky American had finished making the 30-year-old Austin look like a public parks performer, the head of the city's biggest Wimbledon bookmakers announced his clients would have to bet $15 on the American in order to win $10. The same odds were quoted last year against Fred Perry, who beat Budge in the semifinals and went on to capture the championship.

At the same time, he said he would welcome wagers on Baron Gottfried von Cramm of Germany at 3 to 1 and was willing almost to let you name your own figure on the remainder of the field.

In other words—playing as he did today—Budge appears to have no real rival among the amateurs. During the last six games of the first set during which he lost only five points, Budge actually made the clever, cagy Austin look silly, something no man ever has done before.

The audience of 2000 Englishmen sat for the most part in chilly silence. They wore the same dazed expression as did Austin when Budge's hot drives blasted out the two back corners of the court.

Austin summed it all up in one tired sentence.

"I haven't been playing against that kind of speed."

Lost Only Six Games.

Budge, who won the Queens Club singles title a year ago, finished the 1937 tournament with the record of losing only six games in 12 sets.

Aided by his Davis cup partner, Gene Mako, Budge also retained the doubles crown. He and Mako whipped the French pair of Christian Boussus and Yvon Petra, 6-1, 7-9, 6-1.

The women's singles title went to Jadwiga Jedrzejowska of Poland, who defeated Kay Stammers of England, 6-3, 6-0. Mrs. Dorothy Andrus and Mme. Sylvia Henrotin of France won from Mary Hardwick and Ermyntrude Harvey of England in the women's doubles final, 8-6, 6-1, and the mixed event went to Susan Noel of England and Chevalier Paul de Borman of Belgium by virtue of a 7-5, 6-2 conquest of Mlle. Jedrzejowska and Henry Billington of England.

STRABO NOSE VICTOR OVER RUDIE IN THE DWYER STAKES

SCENESHIFTER, THE FAVORITE, FINISHES THIRD, A LENGTH BACK

Race Is Second Battle of Three Horses That Took the Money in Recent Shevlin Stakes.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin's Strabo, a son of Pompey which had a hard time making his way last year, spoiled the well laid plans of the favorite players and Earl Sande today when he scored a thrilling nose victory in the forty-ninth Dwyer Stakes at Aqueduct.

Rising to the peak of his checkered career, the New York-owned colt got up in the final stride of the one and an eighth miles to beat out William H. Gallagher's pace-setting Rudie. Maxwell Howard's Sceneshifter, trained by Sande and the seven to 10 choice of the crowd of 15,000, trailed by another length.

A week ago in the Shevlin, Rudie won with Sceneshifter second and the plodding Strabo third. Today it appeared that Rudie would repeat and win the purse of $10,750 as he left the barrier in front and headed into the long stretch with a length and a half advantage.

Meanwhile Strabo, with Sam Renick riding, was having a difficult time finding racing room. He was blocked off when he attempted to move up on the inside at the far turn and Renick was forced to take his mount to the middle of the track. From that position he began the drive that carried him to victory, and returned his supporters 4 to 1 for their confidence. It also marked the fifth victory in eight starts for Mrs. Iselin's improved star. In the three other races he either was second or third.

The talent broke even in the two other features, winning when John Hay Whitney's Inhale took the Astoria Stakes for two-year-old fillies at 2 to 1. They lost when John A. Manfuso's Aneroid, winner of the Suburban in near record time, captured the seven furlongs of the Carter Handicap and George D. Widener's favored High Fleet finished last in a field of eight. Aneroid was well played at 4 to 1, however, in earning the purse of $8875 and running his winnings for the year to $31,460.

Aneroid, instead of setting the pace as he did in the mile and a quarter of the Suburban, came from fifth place in the early stages to win by a head from F. A. Burton's Deliberator.

High waters have been the general rule during the past week with the result that Missouri fishermen have not been returning with creels as full as they might be. With a let-up in the rains the Ozark streams would be clear and in good condition for the week-end. Some anglers who make their casts in small, fast-moving Ozark rivers will have good results today, if past performances can be used as an indicator.

E. C. Lowell of Camdenton summed up conditions around the Lake of the Ozarks up until Friday by stating: "Lake waters have been in poor shape the past week, although fish have been brought in every day. The big Niangua above the back water was clearing rapidly today. . . . At the head of the small creeks where clear water was available some fine large-mouth bass were taken, but these numbered few. . . . Silver Bass are striking very, very hard on live minnows. The lake proper is still muddy, but the creeks are in good shape."

Rules for "Proof" Shippers.

It is unquestionably true that every fisherman should know from A to Z the laws of the State in which he is engaging in the sport. K. N. Merritt of the Railway Express Agency announces his company has compiled a booklet of the various state laws in regard to the shipment of game fish from one state to another. . . . "to the folks back home." From the tone of Merritt's statement one would conclude that his company had been through many sieges with trophy hunters who attempted to ship the wrong fish in the wrong manner. These booklets can be obtained at express offices.

New City Manager Plan.

An idea for St. Louis! . . .Springfield (Mo.) boasts of a unique city office recently created—the city fish commissioner. WPA funds will be an aid to Commissioner William H. Johnson in furthering landscaping, erection of new ponds and streams and improvement of the old lying within the municipality, to provide angling inside the city limits.

Floats.

Float trips from the upper Big Piney to Hooker in Pulaski County are proving very successful, according to George Laum, warden at St. James. The biggest prize to date is a five-pound two-ounce smallmouth bass. . . . Trout fishing in Montauk State Park in Dent County must also be very good, judging from a report that Leo Cummins of that resort hooked a four-pounder . . . right after a two-pounder.

Quail Hatch at Alton.

St. Louis sportsmen may find pleasure today in taking advantage of visitors' day at Anderson Game Farm at Alton, Ill. Anderson reports that he has on display over 600 pheasants and quail. There are 300 old and young Bob White quail and 350 old and young Mongolian ringneck and golden pheasants. There will be 100 quail and 100 pheasant eggs hatching today and visitors will be well rewarded with a study of the farm.

Anderson, who has been in this business for several years, is a strong advocate of raising of game birds in backyards 25-foot-even lots.

The Anderson Game Farm is located at the intersection of Milton road and Coronado drive, a short distance from the Alton business section.

Park Improvements.

A great surprise is in store for those who visit historic old Arrow Rock, one of Missouri's most famous landmarks, now the center of Arrow Rock State Park. Restoration of the "Old Tavern," located 15 miles east of Marshall on State Highway No. 41, has been completed by the Daughters of the American Revolution, who have had the place under their control for the past 12 years. The original Tavern was constructed 107 years ago by slaves, and of burned brick and hand-hewn walnut. The birthplace of three former governors has given way to picnic grounds, swimming pool and outdoor ovens—but none of the antiquity of the place was destroyed in plan of modernization.

Hugh Brixey, superintendent at Roaring River State Park, reports plans have been completed for the making of a 25-acre lake at the lower section of the park next month. A new stone lodge will be completed by July 1 and the several stone houses already are being used by visitors.

More Trout — Fewer Snakes.

George Barnes, keeper at Montauk State Park, is poison to snakes who are destructive to his trout. Since the first of the year he has killed 242 water moccasins and seven copperheads, both of which type are destructive to fish life. A new 95-foot growing pond for trout is nearing completion at the Bennett Spring hatchery in Dallas and Laclede counties. The construction of the new pond was made necessary by the large number of baby trout now ready to be removed from the troughs.

KAYO STEVENS IS SIGNED TO BOX SIMINGTON

Jackie Callahan, matchmaker for the Navy American Legion Post, last night signed Johnny "Kayo" Stevens, the Irish-Greek from Cleveland, to oppose Young Simington, hard-punching featherweight from Poplar Bluff, Mo., in one of the three 10-rounders supporting the headliner between Allen Matthews and Emilio Martinez on the fistic card, June 29, at the Auditorium.

Stevens comes here with a good record. He has knocked out Billy Mack, Sammy Wagner, Jimmy Shannon, Carlos Garcia, Jose Valparaso, Mickey Goodwin, Jackie Mitchell and Mel Coyle and has outpointed Orville Drouillard, Tiger "Kid" Walker, Roger Baernard, Stumpy Jacobs and Paul Lee.

In other recent matches, Stevens lost on points to Freddie Miller, former featherweight champion, and Dominick Mancini.

Simington, who won over Armanda Sicilia twice, kayoed Paul Lee and handed Pat Kissinger a lacing in local bouts during the winter season, has scored four victories since fighting here. He beat Roger Bernard twice in Kansas City, and he won over Frankie Gerard, Young Cline and Jim Kelly on knockouts.

Martinez will come here from Los Angeles early next week.

EXACTLY TO MY TASTE!
VAN DYCK

Outstanding, you'll agree!

Just as a certain perfection of face and figure makes one girl outstanding, so does a certain perfection of selection and manufacture make one cigar outstanding.

Van Dyck 32's, because of their fine selected tobaccos—their fragrant, cool-smoking qualities—are unusual cigars; are in such high favor that men bought over 140 million of them last year.

You'll take to Van Dyck 32's from your very first puff. They've a way with them. They make friends easily and they keep their friends long! Nothing could be easier than to know Van Dyck. A nickel makes the happy introduction.

Eye-Witnes Strike

Testimony Senate

By PAUL Y. ANDERSON,

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

(Copyrighted, 1937, by Pulitzer Publishing Co.)

CHICAGO, June 19.

WHAT happened in South Chicago on Memorial day, when striking steel workers and sympathizers encountered a large waiting force of city policemen near the plant of the Republic Steel Corporation, and suffered a loss of ten lives and more than 60 wounded? In a few days the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee of the United States Senate will be ready in Washington to proceed with hearings which will furnish the official answer to that question.

Meanwhile, this correspondent, after a painstaking investigation, conducted on the ground, is able to present a succession of eye-witness accounts of that bloody occasion, which impressively corroborate the moving picture record which was described in dispatches from the Washington bureau of this newspaper, published last Wednesday and Thursday.

These eye-witness accounts serve, in the most striking manner, to substantiate and amplify the dreadful picture presented by that extraordinary piece of documentary evidence already in the committee's hands—the suppressed Paramount news reel film which Senators and investigators viewed in Washington last week.

Some of these witnesses were wounded by the guns and clubs of the police. Here they recount many instances of bloody violence and death which will be recognized at once by those who have seen the film, or read the descriptions of it which appeared in the Post-Dispatch. Moreover, some of the witnesses themselves, and one in particular, are easily identified in the pictures, participating in the scenes which they describe in the following interviews and affidavits.

Record of Films, Corroborated by Testimony of Witnesses.

Allowing for the minor variations always encountered in human testimony concerning large-scale actions, their individual stories fit into, and round out, the story told by the film, with all the neatness of a jig-saw puzzle. It is doubtful whether any investigating body was ever confronted with a more complete picture of a given episode than that which will unfold before the La Follette committee when it opens hearings on the "Memorial day massacre."

This testimony, as indicated by affidavits and oral statements already made to agents

Eye-Witnesses Describe Killing of Steel Strikers by Police in South Chicago

Testimony Senate Investigating Committee Is Soon to Hear

By PAUL Y. ANDERSON,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

(Copyrighted, 1937, by Pulitzer Publishing Co.)

Essence of the Testimony

That strikers and sympathizers left a mass meeting to engage in a demonstration before the main gate of the Republic plant, with the object of inducing non-striking workers to come out and join the union.

That, at a point three blocks distant from the gate, they were halted by a large body of uniformed city policemen, whose commanding officers ordered the marchers to turn back.

That, after a parley lasting two or three minutes, the police, without any warning, opened fire with pistols, simultaneously hurling gas grenades—of both tear and nauseating types—into the mass behind, and immediately charging them with riot clubs.

That eight demonstrators and one bystander, were killed or fatally wounded by pistol bullets and beatings administered by the police, that nearly 100 others were injured, some seriously, and that no policeman was shot, and none was seriously hurt.

That the demonstrators offered virtually no resistance, and that the only offensive act on their part was a shower of stones thrown toward the police from the mid-section of the marchers, in response to the first volley of gas grenades and pistol shots.

That minutes after the terror-stricken demonstrators were in full flight across the prairie, the police continued to pursue them, attacking them with clubs and gas, and that a number of stragglers were surrounded and beaten unconscious, one literally having his brains beaten out, and that many men, prostrate on the ground from gunshot wounds, were clubbed into unconsciousness when they tried to move.

That two men were allowed to bleed to death—one as he lay in the open field, and the other in a patrol wagon, in which the police placed him after dragging him out of a first-aid car which was taking him to a hospital.

CHICAGO, June 19.

WHAT happened in South Chicago on Memorial day, when striking steel workers and sympathizers encountered a large waiting force of city policemen near the plant of the Republic Steel Corporation, and suffered a loss of ten lives and more than 60 wounded? In a few days the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee of the United States Senate will be ready in Washington to proceed with hearings which will furnish the official answer to that question.

Meanwhile, this correspondent, after a painstaking investigation, conducted on the ground, is able to present a succession of eye-witness accounts of that bloody occasion, which impressively corroborate the moving picture record which was described in dispatches from the Washington bureau of this newspaper, published last Wednesday and Thursday.

These eye-witness accounts serve, in the most striking manner, to substantiate and amplify the dreadful picture presented by that extraordinary piece of documentary evidence already in the committee's hands—the suppressed Paramount news reel film which Senators and investigators viewed in Washington last week.

Some of these witnesses were wounded by the guns and clubs of the police. Here they recount many instances of bloody violence and death which will be recognized at once by those who have seen the film, or read the descriptions of it which appeared in the Post-Dispatch. Moreover, some of the witnesses themselves, and one in particular, are easily identified in the pictures, participating in the scenes which they describe in the following interviews and affidavits.

Record of Films, Corroborated by Testimony of Witnesses.

Allowing for the minor variations always encountered in human testimony concerning large-scale actions, their individual stories fit into, and round out, the story told by the film, with all the neatness of a jig-saw puzzle. It is doubtful whether any investigating body was ever confronted with a more complete picture of a given episode than that which will unfold before the La Follette committee when it opens hearings on the "Memorial day massacre."

This testimony, as indicated by affidavits and oral statements already made to agents of the La Follette committee, to attorneys for the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, and to this writer, and confirmed by the news reel, will all go to establish the essential facts set forth in the box above.

Events Leading Up to Memorial Day Tragedy.

Before proceeding with the narratives of the eye-witnesses, it may be helpful briefly to set the stage. On the Friday preceding Memorial day Sunday, police trapped a group of marching strikers in a dead-end street two blocks from the mill, and fighting ensued in which more than a dozen strikers were severely clubbed, and one policeman was reported to have suffered a broken arm.

On Sunday afternoon about 2000 persons attended a mass meeting at strikers' headquarters a few blocks distant from the mill, and, after listening to two speakers, started on a march which was scheduled to take them past the main gate of the plant. In addition to striking Republic workers, the marchers included striking employes of the Inland Steel Co. and the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., whose plants are in the same area, and sympathizers, including women and children.

Alongside the Republic mill is an open 50-acre field. The land is marshy and overgrown with swamp grass. The majority of the marchers lined up on a street parallel to the mill property, on the opposite side of the field, but a group estimated at between 300 and 400 entered the field, and proceeded along a winding wagon road which, after going about an eighth of a mile, turns into a street which runs parallel to the mill, about 200 yards from the high fence surrounding it.

At a point some 30 yards short of where the dirt road turns into the street, the police had formed in a long line extending across the road and to a considerable distance on each side of it. Behind them were several patrol wagons, and numerous reserve squads. As shown by the film and other pictures, the marchers halted at the police line, and engaged in a parley with the officers.

The spokesman, later identified as Joe Powell, a striker, was flanked by two men carrying American flags, and grouped around and behind them were marchers carrying placards with such inscriptions as, "Come Out—Help Win the Strike," "Republic Steel vs. the People," and "C I O."

At this point, let us introduce one of the most articulate and observant of the eye-witnesses. She is Mrs. Lupe Marshall, who teaches Spanish at Hull House, and performs social service work among the 5000 Mexicans who comprise a colony in South Chicago. She was born in Mexico, but has lived in this country 20 years. She is 30 years old, four feet, 11 inches in height, and prior to this experience weighed 97 pounds. Her present weight is slightly under 95. She is the mother of three children.

Her statement originally was made in the form of an interview with this writer, within the precincts of Hull House, made famous by the late Jane Addams. Subsequently she repeated it to agents of the La Follette Committee, before which she is expected to be an early witness. She said:

"I had been told about the mass meeting. Expecting that many Mexican workers would attend, I decided to be present to observe their attitude. The first speaker was Leo Kryzcki. He spoke in a humorous tone throughout, poking fun at Republic, and asking if that company considered itself 'a bigger fish than the United States Steel Corporation and Jones & Laughlin,' which had signed up with the C I O.

"I remarked to a Mexican writer who was with me, that a cool-headed, good-natured man like Kryzcki was the right type to lead a strike.

Singing Women Joined in March Toward Plant.

"The other speaker was John Fontecchio, a C I O organizer. He took a more serious attitude, but at no time did either of the speakers urge or even suggest the use of violence. Fontecchio said: 'We know the Republic has armed men, machine guns and ammunition in the plant. We don't need any of those things. We are going over there, and ask those men to come out and join the union, and help us win this strike.

" 'We have the right to picket peacefully, and we intend to use it. We have the law on our side, and Mayor Kelly has told the newspapers that we will not be molested.'

"There was more," Mrs. Marshall continued, "but it was all along that line. When Fontecchio finished, a motion was made from the floor to march to the plant and picket, and it was carried unanimously. The parade formed in the street outside, led by the men with flags and placards.

"I was with a large group of women. They were singing a song which had a chorus about 'C I O.' As we started across the field a woman exclaimed: 'Oh, do you see what I see?'

"I looked, and there was a long line of policemen deploying across the road between us and the row of houses beyond. As we came near them, they advanced to meet us, and we came to a full stop. Our people rather spread out along the line, facing the police. Those behind pressed forward so hard trying to see that I had to brace myself to keep from being shoved into a policeman.

Women Cursed by Police and Right to Picket Denied.

"The police immediately began cursing us, and calling the women vile names. The one directly in front of me yelled:

" 'What are you bitches doing here? Get the hell out of here!'

"I was only a few yards away from our spokesman, and I could hear him saying: 'We only want to get through to picket—we have a right to picket peacefully—Mayor Kelly announced in the papers that we would be allowed to picket.'

"A police Captain replied: 'Like hell you will—get on back there.' "

(The news reel shows Joe Powell arguing earnestly with a Police Captain, identified as either James Mooney or Thomas Kilroy, and the Captain replying with an angry gesture toward the strikers' rear.)

"Then," Mrs. Marshall continued, "I heard a sort of a dead, flat pop back in the midst of our people, and an outburst of screams and shouts back there."

"Too Horrible to Seem Real," When Shooting Began.

"It was not a second," she continued, "until there was a terrible explosion all along the line in front of us, and I saw that all the policemen had their guns out, and were shooting. I was so stunned I could hardly realize what was happening, but I remember thinking that they must be firing blanks—that they couldn't be shooting right into us.

"But then I heard frightful screaming and yelling behind me, and I turned around, and saw people lying all over the ground. There were eight down in a heap right behind me. It was too horrible to seem real."

(This moment is graphically portrayed in the news reel, and in many "still" photographs. They show tiny Mrs. Marshall, her back now turned to the police and the camera, seemingly about to fall over on the heap of people on the ground.)

"The next thing I remember," continued Mrs. Marshall, "was seeing one of the workers running. A policeman was right on his heels, clubbing him on the head until it seemed to me that blood was running out of his eyes. He went down, but the policeman kept hitting him on the head. Finally he grabbed the man by one foot, and started dragging him away.

"I screamed at him: 'Don't do that. Can't you see he is terribly injured?' Just then a policeman hit me over the head from behind with his club. I fell and he kicked

Those Killed

KENNETH REED, 21, striking Inland Steel worker, shot in the groin and chest; bled to death in a patrol wagon.

HILDING ANDERSON, 27, strike sympathizer employed at the Carnegie-Illinois plant, shot twice through the back; died after five futile blood transfusions.

SAMUEL POPOVICH, 45, striking steel worker; clubbed to death.

JOSEPH ROTHMUND, 47, shot in the thigh; bled to death on the field.

ANTHONY TAGLIORE, striking Republic worker; died four days later from pistol bullet wounds in the abdomen.

OTIS JONES, a fruit peddler who happened to be visiting relatives in the neighborhood; shot through spinal column and paralyzed; died June 8.

JOSEPH FRANCISCO, 17, unemployed, who joined demonstrators; shot in the abdomen; died June 15.

LEE TISDALE, 50, striking Negro steel worker employed by Youngstown Sheet & Tube; died yesterday of bullet wounds.

The Injured

More than 60 strikers and sympathizers were treated in hospitals for bullet wounds and other injuries, some of whom are still in serious condition.

Police reported 24 of their number injured, but particulars are lacking. A police photograph of their injured shows half a dozen men. One carries an arm in a sling, and indications are that he is the policeman who suffered a broken arm in Friday's melee, when demonstrators fought back. Another has pulled up his pants leg, to show a bandage around his calf. The third has a patch on his chin; the fourth has taped knuckles.

The Issue

CHICAGO, JUNE 19.

ONLY one issue is involved in the strike now in progress in the plants of four "independent" steel companies — Bethlehem, Republic, Inland and Youngstown. On that fact all parties are agreed. The issue is whether the companies will sign agreements with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, a unit of the C I O. Plant managers say there is no disagreement with the workers over wages, hours or working conditions, but add they are determined to sign nothing. Union leaders contend that such a position is unreasonable.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

In the Chinese Manner.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

SURE, we can build levees and wall in the Ohio, as they have done with the Mississippi. That will squeeze the next flood up 10 feet higher on them, as they have done on us. This is the Chinese system, whereby 100,000 people were drowned in the Yangtze River.

Army officers and engineers probably fear insubordination or heresy if they oppose the present river bed obstruction works to narrow the water flow for a nine-foot channel, or if they oppose the higher and higher levees. Also, no politician or newspaper is going to oppose any Government spending scheme.

I know of bottlenecks on the Mississippi that have reduced the flood-carrying capacity of the old river bed 50 per cent with dikes, revetted sandbars and growing willows where flood waters should flow. Kennett Castle, Mo., is one.

Before 1850, each town had a four- or five-foot levee for protection, and the floods spread out gently over a vast area of lowlands to a depth of four or five feet in Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana, where the sediment and fill-up are needed and where the hazards certainly belong. Some went to the foothills and some to the farms. Some of the farmers had mounds for their home and stock. They shortly returned to farm lands as rich as the valley of the Nile, and, with their long summers and old-fashioned self-reliance, they never failed to make a living.

But for the levees and obstruction works, the stage of water at the mouth of the Ohio would have been 10 or 15 feet lower during the recent flood. Then the men of the Ohio River communities could have had a fair fight with the flood waters and probably enjoyed the scrap as they have before. But the "controllers" and politicians will have their way and see to it that no cotton farmer of the South ever gets his feet muddy.

Boaz, Ky. W. W. WRATHER.

Clark Gable's Consistent Obtuseness.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

WHOEVER conceived the notion that the beauteous Clark Gable could be other than Gable in any character must have been saturated with that Hollywood mentality which ballyhoos the customary mediocrity of eminent "stars" as the "best ever." Programs devoted to fulsome praise to the contrary, the deluge of B stuff and independents continues. The question is insistent, "How many actors are there really on the screen?" Don't blame Clark if his box office appeal elevates him into heights in which he feels that whiskers are anachronisms. Clark is more consistent in his obtuseness than his employers. LOUIS F. FUCHS.

Those Zinc Tokens.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

OUR Jefferson City solons recently slipped over a 2 per cent sales tax. Millions of zinc tokens will be struck and the time will come when millions of taxpayers will also strike. Incidentally, zinc tokens will make things hum in the zinc industry, which has not been the same since washboards went out of fashion. Zinc is more permanent than cardboard milk-bottle tops, the implication probably being that the sales tax also is to be permanent.

The tokens will be made larger than street car tokens so that there will be no confusing of the two. But to minds accustomed to subtle analysis, what is the difference? With a street car token, you are given a ride; with the zinc sales tax token, you are taken for a ride.

BEDLAMUS.

Discerns Subtle Roosevelt Plot.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

HEADLINE in the Post-Dispatch, "Mrs. Roosevelt says woman will be President some day." Now it comes out.

Add this to Mr. Roosevelt's statement that he doesn't want a third term, and we have the subtle announcement naively given that Mrs. Roosevelt will succeed F. D. R. and keep the office in the family. THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER.

Would Name It for Daniel Boone.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

A FITTING suggestion is being fostered by St. Charles County civic interests to name the State's fine new crossing of the Missouri River at Weldon Springs the Daniel Boone Bridge.

In this immediate vicinity, the great American pioneer spent the last 27 years of his long, picturesque career. He lived and died in a stone house still occupied by a descendant, on Femme Osage Creek, a few miles west of the bridge. The Spanish rulers of the territory made him commandant of the Femme Osage district in 1800, investing him with magisterial authority. He died in 1822, shortly after the Missouri frontier had achieved statehood. Across this old hunting ground of his still runs Boone's Lick road, the original route to a salt lick he found near Boonville.

It is not only a pleasant custom but a convenient one to have a name for a landmark such as this $1,200,000, three-lane bridge. Although the State Highway Commission wisely refrains from official adoption of names for its works, it is willing for the community to erect plaques, establishing the title. Selection of this name would be in harmony with the Lewis and Clark bridges.

Lewis and Clark consulted Boone about the country ahead before starting their famous journey in 1804. READER.

ONE-MAN GOVERNMENT.

If Mr. Roosevelt's program of legislation should be enacted by Congress as presented, just what kind of government would we have in the United States?

Manifestly, it would not be democracy.

Hugh S. Johnson, of Blue Eagle celebrity, says the President, given the powers he has asked for, would be a "Federal Governor." Other commentators have described it as dictatorship.

In plain language, it would be One-Man Government.

First, the court-packing plan. That bill, as written, contemplates a Supreme Court created in Mr. Roosevelt's own image, to do his bidding. It is the cornerstone of the proposed One-Man Government structure.

The bill for reorganizing the executive department. The idea is not new. Mr. Taft advocated it 25 years ago. Mr. Harding urged it, with sincerity. It has often been discussed. Here, then, Mr. Roosevelt had a good cause. Efficiency, simplification, economy were to be served.

But the Roosevelt plan, under guise of reorganization, would reduce the great independent agencies of our Government, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Tariff Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, to departmental adjuncts, necessarily subservient to the President. It would emasculate the office of Comptroller-General, now an important check on Federal expenditures. Another feature is a vague, mysterious secretariat, or Brain Trust, that would draft the bills which the President would hand down to Congress with his blessing. The Roosevelt blessing, translated, would be "must legislation."

The wages and hours bill, if passed as presented, would create a Labor Standards Board of five men who would fix wages and hours in every business enterprise in the country engaged in or affecting interstate trade. These men would be appointees of the President, his creatures.

No five men, no 500 men, no conceivable bureau, operating in Washington headquarters, could successfully supervise and direct the infinitely varied and multitudinous business of the United States. Mr. Roosevelt thinks it can be done, wants it done and wants to do it.

In the name of water and flood control, a bill has been thrust at Congress which, with seven regional authorities, would establish an overlordship of agriculture such as that exercised in industry by the Labor Standards Board.

Back of every board, authority, commission, department is the President in absolute command, and with a puppet Supreme Court to validate every proposal of the executive as enacted by Congress.

Such, roughly, is Mr. Roosevelt's program. It were easy to denounce it, easy to ridicule it, as it would be ridiculed coming from any source. But a President of the United States is speaking. He is giving to Congress, as his considered judgment, the measures to be taken on the undemonstrated theory that they would minister to the welfare and happiness of the people.

His program is centralization beyond anything heretofore conceived or, at least, officially projected by an administration at Washington.

The program is no doubt foredoomed to failure, but the boundless audacity of it is an advance in personal ambition which America has not before encountered.

It is the program of a man who seeks to be an American Caesar.

No Caesar, be he as wise as Marcus Aurelius, as benevolently paternal as Augustus, is wanted in America.

RELIGION AND STATE JOBS.

One of the reasons given by Dr. R. Emmet Kane and Charles Hertenstein for their resignations from the local Old-Age Assistance Board is the continued use of the Governor's questionnaire which asks applicants for State positions, among other information, to list their religious affiliation.

What business is it of the Governor's or the State's what a jobholder's religion may be? Does it make any difference in the discharge of an employe's duties whether he is Catholic or Protestant, Jewish or Mormon, Buddhist or Hard-Shell Baptist? The Governor told him, says Dr. Kane, that the purpose was "to provide for more even distribution of patronage on religious lines." What un-American nonsense this is!

When he protested, Dr. Kane adds, Gov. Stark said the St. Louis board and its employes might ignore the questions about religion. It would be well if all applicants for State posts should ignore them. Then it would be possible to bring selections closer to the commonsense basis of ability.

SOUTH CHICAGO IN THE LIGHT OF HISTORY.

How does the South Chicago massacre, so graphically described in eye-witness accounts in the Post-Dispatch today, compare with the Haymarket riot and the violence at Homestead, Pa., two of the most celebrated episodes in the history of American labor disputes?

The riot in Haymarket Square, Chicago, on May 4, 1886, grew out of the movement for the eight-hour day. Chicago, with 80,000 wage-earners on strike, was its center. Cyrus H. McCormick Jr. had locked out his 1400 union employes and replaced them with non-union workmen. On May 3, however, he granted the shorter day, and when his non-union workers left the plant to celebrate the concession, they joined forces with union strikers who were meeting nearby. Police were called and several men were killed in the fighting that followed.

The next night, some 1500 strikers gathered in Haymarket Square in public protest. Mayor Carter Harrison attended, found the meeting orderly, and left. The strikers were beginning to depart when a squad of police under Inspector John Bonfield appeared suddenly and began to disperse the meeting. Just then a bomb, set by an unseen person, exploded, killing a policeman. In the shooting which followed, four strikers were killed and 50 wounded. Of the 67 policemen injured, seven later died.

The violence at Homestead, on July 5 and 6, 1893, was caused by H. C. Frick's attempt, as general manager of the Carnegie Steel Co., to force members of the Amalgamated Association of Steel and Iron Workers to accept a contract with reduced wages and other disadvantages. Closing the Homestead plant, Frick sent two barge loads of armed Pinkerton detectives up the Monongahela River to rout the men. When the detectives tried to take possession of the plant, firing ensued and men on both sides were injured. Next day, the incensed workmen poured oil on the river in an effort to burn the boats. The detectives finally surrendered, but special deputies battled with the men off and on for days. Altogether, 11 workmen and spectators were killed by the special officers, who lost seven from their ranks.

As the facts show, Haymarket and Homestead took more lives, but for deliberate police brutality, the slaughter at South Chicago takes first place.

THE FALL OF BILBAO.

The fall of Bilbao has been foreshadowed for weeks. In contrast to the fumbling strategy of the Franco drive on Madrid, the siege of Bilbao was a masterpiece of military efficiency.

Was it the late Gen. Mola who designed this campaign, or was it master-minded by German and Italian officers who learned their technique in the World War? In any case, here we saw in miniature a replica of the methods used in the great drives on the Western front—the deliberate massing of great numbers of troops, extensive use of airplanes for reconnaisance and bombing purposes, long artillery preparation, capture of strategic points to the end of paralyzing defense tactics—then the successful push.

Is this the beginning of the end of the Spanish war? Reckoned along purely military lines, it is tempting to hazard an affirmative answer. Most of Spain has been in the hands of the rebels for some time, and now, in Bilbao, they have a valuable port, a city of important industries and a hinterland rich in coveted minerals. Santander and the temporary Loyalist capital—Valencia—are threatened. Large Franco forces may be released to augment the Madrid besiegers.

But, as Bismarck said, we cannot ignore the imponderables. Men who are fighting for their own homes against foreign invaders often rise to heights of heroism and do the seemingly impossible. The ghastly massacre at Guernica is an event to inspire such heroism. The defeat of so marvelous and well-beloved a people as the Basques, hopelessly outnum- and lacking in such vital weapons as artillery and airplanes, may spur the Loyalist forces to iron determination.

In the court of world opinion, the Basque offensive made many converts to the Loyalist cause. That court witnessed a simple, industrious, ardently religious people mowed down with cold, machine-like precision. It shuddered at the news of Guernica. It trembled for the fate of the innocent women and children of Bilbao, huddled in tunnels and cellars, subsisting on granite-like black bread and drippings of water. It looked upon the presence of Italian troops and German aviators with the natural revulsion reserved for hired and imported murderers.

For a century Bilbao has proudly withstood invasion. She falls now, but a phoenix may arise from her ashes.

J. M. BARRIE.

It is the world's misfortune rather than his own that J. M. Barrie had gone out of popular fashion long before his death in London yesterday. "Too much whimsy, too much sentiment and sweetness" was the verdict of a streamlined generation that rejected him.

His works would have repaid closer attention than they have had from the sophisticates. If whimsy has gone out of date, is it not because the moderns who have attempted it lack the delicate, adept touch of Barrie, its master? Nor was Barrie by any means all fancy and sentiment. Along with his ventures into those realms he gave his readers irony and satire, mostly gentle but sometimes biting. He was of the Victorian age, but no Victorian. He never let sentimentalism blind him to the truth about human nature, and his insights would do credit to the most stern of the realists.

"Sentimental Tommy" is one of the most delightful of fiction characters, and readers soon know all the involved motives of that resourceful young man. "Margaret Ogilvy," a sketch of Barrie's mother, is done with affection and tenderness, but her faults and crotchets are in it, too. Pity and wonder and gentleness mark Barrie's pages, yet nothing of the mawkish intrudes.

Like his Peter Pan, the Boy Who Never Grew Up, much of Barrie, master of both fiction and drama as well as essay, is immortal. "My Lady Nicotine" will be a classic as long as pipe and tobacco remain a masculine solace. His "Admirable Crichton" has become a metaphor. And the Scotch villagers of Thrums, fictional name of Barrie's native Kirriemuir, are an unforgettable gallery of human beings.

A DEBT OF HONOR, BY JOVE.

It would be a gracious gesture for St. Louis to confer the degree of honorary citizenship on that charming fellow, Ford Frick, whom we shall identify as the president of the National League. He has served us nobly.

How affairs were going with the Cardinals when our friend stepped boldly into the breach may be quickly stated. They were going backwards fast. Something heroic had to be done, a jolt, a smash, a sock. Yes, yes, but who and where was the man to do it? The right arm of Breadon was palsied. Rickey's tongue—trumpets of Jericho, that tongue—clove to the roof of his mouth. Like Laocoon, Frisch was in the coils of the jitters. For Dizzy Dean every afternoon was, as Julius Caesar wryly put it, the ides of March.

In the darkest hour, with nothing ahead but the penury and woe and degradation of the second division, Ford Frick stripped Dizzy of his epaulettes and sword and banished him to the dreary, barren waste of indefinite suspension.

The rest is history. It is epic poetry. It is bugles blaring and drums rolling and plumes waving. Now and then the Cardinals lose, and Dizzy Dean nods, e'en as Homer, but the Redbirds are soaring like eagles. Must a sordid note be struck? Very well. As the ancient ballad hummed it, "Lord, how the money rolls in!" They have come in troops, brigades and solid phalanxes. They have poured in through the gates, a tumbling river of Pactolus, a golden avalanche.

Isn't that about it? And the fountain-head of all the happy sequelae is the sentence passed on Dizzy Dean which Ford Frick managed after a skiddery interlude to get back into the archives.

We St. Louisans feel we are citizens of no mean city. Let's prove it by doing something handsome for our splendid benefactor.

REORGANIZATION PROPOSAL.

Storm Clouds Over Washington

President faces most difficult legislative situation of his career, correspondent says; cites condemnation of court plan by Senate committee and Garner's sudden departure as evil auguries for executive; his effort to gain more power through reorganization and wages-hours bills likely to be thwarted by Congress, writer thinks.

Erwin D. Canham, Washington Correspondent, in the Christian Science Monitor.

THE Senate Judiciary Committee's 20,000-word adverse report on the President's Supreme Court bill will go down as one of the country's great state papers. In simple language, as forthright as the President's own fireside talks, the committee devastatingly attacks his court plan. It takes his original misguided arguments at their face value and makes hay with them. It leaves no apparent room for compromise.

It is hard to see how any member of the committee majority that signed this report could vote for a two-Judge increase or any compromise along such lines. And the group entrenches itself in strong fortifications, along lines that the compromisers will find difficult to capture. They should attract even wider Senate support.

Not only does the Judiciary Committee come out with this hammering on the bill, but Vice-President Garner shakes Washington's dust from his heels and goes to Uvalde. Perhaps there isn't much significance in the event. But to external observation, there is a good deal.

In the first place, the Vice-President's vote might yet be needed to break a tie. Second, the Vice-President's political strategy, his great influence on members of the Senate are even more essential. In the bargain which Senator Robinson is now apparently seeking, "Jack" Garner's expert services as a horse trader would be invaluable.

Either the Vice-President does not care to work in this cause—and is thus making his first open breach with the President—or else he isn't thought necessary at this time. It cannot be that Mr. Roosevelt considers he is strong enough to put across his court plan, or much of the rest of his "desired" program, without the Vice-President's services. Therefore, either the Vice-President is coming back when the showdown time comes a month or so hence, or else he is going to sulk in his tent.

Meantime, as the days go by, the President's program more and more takes the shape of a concentration of executive authority. The power to be vested in the new board proposed in the Black-Connery bill is tremendous, and when coupled with the other additions to presidential authority in the reorganization bills, the farm bill and other measures, it seems to many observers that the balance has been tipped too far.

Strong groups in Congress, zeal whetted by apparent success in blocking the original court plan, are taking similar lines of approach to the executive reorganization plan and the Black-Connery bill. It would be very surprising if either of these measures passed in anything resembling its original form. The reorganization scheme is already hacked into various pieces from which something may be salvaged, but probably such desirable elements as extension of the civil service are lost.

More and more, the introduction of the President's court plan seems to have been a turning point in his administration. It hangs like a thundercloud over the remainder of his legislative program. But its consequences have been twofold: on the one hand, whether as an effect or not, he has had a season of favorable court decisions and a vacancy to fill; on the other hand, he has the most difficult legislative situation of his career.

Messrs. Cochran, Cohen and Jackson are being portrayed as a group of clever and designing young lawyers who are trying to "make America over" in a new pattern of centralized authority. Taking the court bill and the wages-hours bill together, the charge doesn't seem far-fetched. Certainly the wages-hours bill gives a presidentially appointed board the power to reshape American industry in accordance with an economic theory which may be tragically unsound, and is so held by such an authority as Dr. Harold G. Moulton.

To complicate the picture, we find one solidly backed policy of the administration—the Hull free-trade policy—running up against an increasing clamor for protection from American industry, now that prices are rising so fast. Atop current labor successes, should the wages-hours bill be enacted, and with it Representative Connery's proposal to give virtual embargo power over imports to a board, the pressure for new and higher tariffs and restrictions might be strong enough to sweep the Hull program into the discard.

And also, along comes the $160,000,000 merchant marine program. It should be recognized that this plan, too, is in direct violation of the Hull program. Shipping services were one of the United States' most economical and regular "imports," making possible the export of an equivalent amount of goods.

This new $160,000,000 program, undertaken in the glorious name of foreign trade, is really a blow at Mr. Hull's kind of foreign trade.

Such are the trends. Perhaps in a few weeks' time, judgment of them will have to be revised. The President claims he is just sitting tranquilly back in the White House, waiting for Congress to do what it chooses. We have grandstand seats to observe what he really will do to get out of present difficulties.

MRS. CHAMP CLARK.

From the Kansas City Star.

MRS. CHAMP CLARK, who died at New Orleans last week, was a personality in her own right. A shrewd and intelligent observer of the social and political scene, her humorously pungent comments were welcomed by all who had the privilege of knowing her. Her advice and co-operation were invaluable to her husband in his long political career.

The great disappointment of her life was the failure of her husband to get the presidential nomination in 1912. But his later success as Speaker of the House, and the satisfactory lives of her brilliant son and daughter, filled her last years with happiness. It was given to her to know that in her own capacity, and in the capacity of wife and mother, she had contributed to influence the history of her native State and of the nation.

Building the Constitution

The fifth of a semi-weekly series describing the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, held 150 years ago.

PHILADELPHIA, June 19, 1787.

A BRILLIANT and convincing speech by Delegate James Madison of Virginia in favor of the large-state plan of proportional representation in Congress and a strong national government today held the close attention of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention, in session here. At the conclusion of the address, the Virginia or large-state plan was approved, seven states against three with Maryland divided, after which the Committee of the Whole was dissolved and the 19 resolutions of Delegate Edmund Randolph of Virginia once more were reported to the convention.

The all-important vote, which determined whether the convention should seek to establish a new government or merely revise the failing Articles of Confederation, came on a motion that the Randolph resolutions "should be adhered to as preferable to those of Mr. Paterson." The latter resolutions, proposed by the outstanding New Jersey delegate, represented the small states' fear of possible invasion of their present rights.

New Jersey, New York and Delaware were the only states to vote No. Georgia, which has less than 60,000 population and so belongs, numerically, among the small states, voted with Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Virginia, the largest states. This reflects Georgia's expectation, due to its size, to develop into one of the most populous states.

A speech which literally dumfounded the convention was made yesterday by Delegate Alexander Hamilton of New York, who at the age of 30 is one of the youngest in attendance. Declaring frankly that he did not approve either plan, he said what was needed was a much stronger government than even that which Randolph proposed.

The youthful New Yorker urged that the President and Senate be chosen to serve, not for stated periods, but as long as their behavior was good. He also proposed that Governors of the individual states be appointed by the national Government. Hamilton said he thought "the British Government the best in the world" and he "doubted much whether anything short of it would do in America."

The Hamilton plan was respectfully received, but there is no reason to believe that it will be taken seriously. It was not referred to any committee. Its proponent won the admiration of his fellow-delegates when he said that the crisis was too serious to permit "scruples to prevail over the duty of every man to contribute his efforts for the public safety." But, as Dr. William Samuel Johnson of Delaware said, "The gentleman from New York is praised by all but supported by no gentleman."

The problems of the convention are beginning to be appreciated by the press and the public. The Boston American Herald today said: "To form a generous plan of power for 13 states certainly requires the most consummate wisdom. The same hands that laid the foundation of the temple of liberty are again employed in this arduous task; may they be enabled to finish the fabrick and bring forth the headstone with triumphant shoutings."

Gen. George Washington, who is back in the chair of the presiding officer with the dissolution of the Committee of the Whole, spoke at the quarterly dinner of the Sons of St. Patrick last night in the City Tavern.

Minister Who Took Movies Says Police Opened Attack On Crowd With Pistol Volley

CHICAGO, June 19.

THE following affidavit has been turned over to investigators for the LaFollette Committee, who are here gathering evidence bearing on the Memorial Day tragedy:

By CHESTER B. FISK.

"I am pastor of the South Shore Community Church, 7401 Yates avenue, Chicago, Ill. I am chairman of the Council for Social Action of the Congregational-Christian Churches of Illinois; I am also a member of the Citizens' Emergency Committee on Industrial Relations, a group which includes in its membership most of the outstanding social workers and many of the outstanding ministers of Chicago. I attended the Memorial day demonstration in South Chicago in the capacity of an observer.

"As I approached the point where trouble presently broke out, I could see that the police were drawn up in a line across the road which the marchers were following, in a sort of open space adjacent to a red house which stands at the place where the diagonal dirt road runs into Burley avenue.

Police Ready for Action.

The police line was almost straight at this time, and the police had their night-sticks out and ready for action. The head of the parade came to a stop, confronting the police, and stood there for several minutes while the leaders talked to the police. I was too far away to hear anything that was said. It was then that I decided to take some motion pictures, and I had just sighted the scene with my light meter, when I noticed a double column of police, perhaps as many as 30 or 40, marching eastward in the open space, apparently in an attempt to cover the left flank of the parade. This column of police had hardly gone more than 20 or 30 feet when the trouble began.

"I advanced to a position possibly 60 yards from the police line, just beside a little garden, but I was still too far back and too far to one side to see exactly what was the immediate cause of the trouble—part of the crowd was standing between me and the center of the police line. Almost simultaneously, it seemed to me, the front of the line of strikers began to give way a little, a shower of stones and other missiles flew from the center and rear of the column in the direction of the police, and a volley of explosions rang out.

Through the View-Finder.

"Whether these explosions were gunfire or tear-gas bombs, I could not tell, but through the view-finder on my camera, I saw scores of people go down. I was already taking pictures—first at the center of the disorder, then swinging my camera to the right where I could see the police beginning to charge, then panoraming back slowly to the left to catch the fleeing crowd and the rising clouds of tear-gas smoke. There was no second volley of stones; at the sound of the explosions, those who could turned and ran back.

"Concerning the shooting at the beginning of the disorder, I have only the evidence of my ears to offer—I heard no single shot from either the strikers or the police. The first shooting I heard was a volley from the police. I did not actually see at what time the police drew their guns, and I did not actually see any policeman fire his gun, but I saw the results of police shooting a few minutes later, and even where I was standing, police bullets whistled over my head; one of them brought down a young man standing near me. I later took a picture of him as he lay face down in the grass. Like many others, I could not believe at first that the police were using their guns. I remember thinking that they must be using blank cartridges, then that they must be shooting in the air, and when I realized the truth, I was horrified. It was only then that I realized how serious the situation was.

Strikers in Full Flight.

"By this time, the police were advancing across the field, each end of their line moving inward in the so-called pincers formation; every policeman that I could see had his gun out of his holster and ready to shoot. So far as I could see, every striker on my side of the field was in full flight; in fact, from the beginning to the end of the riot, I did not happen to see a single striker actually fighting with the police. It was then that many of the police broke from formation, running after the fleeing men and striking them down from behind. I had moved back slowly, in a general northwest direction, stopping once to take several feet of the young man whom I mentioned before, as he was lying on the ground. At this point, possibly 100 yards or a little more from the open space where the trouble started, I watched numerous instances of what I can only describe as unrestrained and unnecessary brutality.

"I saw several unarmed and unresisting men, trying to get away, knocked down and beaten unmercifully by two and even three policemen.

Police Confiscated Film.

"I got one series of pictures—the last that I took, and the last that will appear on my 100-foot reel unless the police, who later confiscated my film, have tampered with it—of two policemen chasing a young man who was shouting to them over his shoulder: "I'm going! I'm doing what you told me to do! I'm going as fast I can!' Trying to get across a ditch, the young man stumbled, falling on the other side, and in a moment both policemen were standing over him, taking turns at slugging him with their clubs as hard as they could. I remember thinking: 'My God, they're not just trying to stop him—they must be trying to kill him.' I did not count how many times they struck him, but it must have been at least six or eight times; the moving pictures will show this, if they are recovered, for I held the camera on them until they stopped. I was close enough to hear the terrible impact of each blow as it landed on his head.

Talks With Policemen.

"At last everything seemed to be over. I stood where I was, my camera under my arm, with no thought of running away. Policemen were all around me. I talked casually to one of them, a young fellow who had put his gun away and had his club under his arm, and stood beside me wiping his eyes. He grinned at me, and said, 'Hell, isn't it?' and I answered, 'It certainly is.' 'This gas doesn't help any, does it?' he said, and I agreed that it did not. (The wind had blown the gas toward those of us who were on the west side of the field.) We exchanged several more sentences, and he left me.

A second policeman passed me and I talked with him in much the same way. Then a third policeman came up to me, with his gun still drawn, and said, 'What the hell are you doing here?' 'Just watching,' I said. 'Well, who are you, and what business have you got being here?' he asked. I said that I was a minister (my exact words were 'a preacher') and told him that I had been asked to watch the events of the afternoon as an impartial observer. 'Well, this is a hell of a place for a preacher to be,' he said. 'Get out of here!' I turned and started to walk northeast, toward the place where I had left my car, but he stopped me and said, 'You'd better go back this way.' 'All right,' I said, 'just tell me where you want me to go and I'll go there.' We walked together back through the scene of the disorder.

Prisoners Beaten by Police.

Unconscious and seriously wounded men still lay scattered over the field; one of them was dead, shot through the abdomen. I saw two broken police clubs on the ground, but noticed no other unusual objects.

"As we approached the open space in which the patrol wagons were drawn up, I witnessed two instances of policemen beating strikers on the head and shoulders as they were getting into the wagons, most of which seemed to be full already. I still had no idea that I was under arrest, when another policeman said, 'What about this guy?' and my captor said, 'Sure, what the hell, we might as well run him in, too.' I objected—I told him again who I was and why I was there. I asked to see a captain or a lieutenant. Finally, I tried unsuccessfully to get the number on the star of the policeman who was arresting me. All of my explanations and requests were ignored, and I was told to get into a patrol wagon.

Put Under Arrest.

"The first patrol wagon into which they tried to put me was full of bleeding prisoners, so they put me into a second, in which every seat was taken; I stood up. There were 11 prisoners, including myself—10 men and one girl. Two other men besides myself were uninjured—all of the rest, including the girl, were hurt, some of them seriously. Three men in particular were in desperate need of medical attention, which they did not get for at least an hour and perhaps as much as two hours—the head of the first, from the forehead back, was entirely covered with a thick mass of bright red blood; the head of the second was laid open in several places with deep gashes, and his once white shirt was stained an almost solid red; the third rocked precariously on his seat in a glassy-eyed stuper.

In the Patrol Wagon.

"All of us gave our handkerchiefs to the most seriously hurt, but they were woefully inadequate to stop the flow of blood. Standing in the middle of the jolting wagon, the blood from my fellow passengers dripped on my trousers and shoes and brushed off on my shirt. As we turned into Avenue O, a girl in the road said something to the policeman on the step and he said, 'Shut your mouth, or we'll take you in, too, sister.' On the whole, however, this oficer showed no animosity, and became quite friendly before the ride was over.

"By a very roundabout route, taken to avoid the riot zone, and also because Torrence avenue was under construction, our patrol wagon went to the East Side station, which was too full to receive us. Two of us did get out there, but were told to get back in. As I climbed it, I heard a policeman say, 'That guy doesn't belong in there,' but someone else said, 'Sure, he does'—and shoved me in.

Explanation of No Avail.

"From the East Side station, we went to the South Chicago station, where we got out and were taken in to the lock-up. At our suggestion the police filled out arrest slips for those most seriously hurt first. When my turn finally came, I explained again who I was, and the policeman who was filling in the slips asked a captain (not Capt. Tobin) who was there whether I should be thrown in with the rest. 'Of course,' said the captain; 'why not? He was with them, wasn't he?' Again I tried to explain to him why I was there and what I had been doing, but again I got nowhere.

"As our arrest slips were filled out, we were put into cells—as many as six in cells made for two. There were five in my cell, one of whom was a prisoner serving a sentence on another charge.

Camera Taken from Him.

Sometime between 5 and 5:30 Patrolman Miller came to my cell and said he would have to have my Cine-Kodak. I gave it to him, warning him that I expected to get it back exactly as I gave it to him, and was given a receipt for it.

"At the time I made my first statement, I asked Lieut. O'Donnell if I would get my camera back in time and in condition for use on Monday, if I should be released. He said, 'You'll get your camera back all right, but I don't think the Captain will let you have your film.' Again I warned him that the film must not be removed—that to remove it without exposing the unexposed film would ruin my pictures, that to take it out without a regular container to put it in might damage the film, and that to expose the unexposed film would be to deprive me of the use of my rightful property.

"To Protect Police Department."

"Lieut. O'Donnell told me that my family pictures would be returned to me, and that the police department would reimburse me for any unexposed film, if it were taken. He said the department wanted to protect itself against pictures which were prejudicial to the police, as when a photographer at a riot scene might take a lot of pictures of policemen hitting rioters, but none of rioters hitting policemen. I made one more strong protest against the removal of my film.

"Through the efforts of quite a number of interested people, I was finally released by Capt. James Mooney, Supervisory Captain of the Second Division, with appropriate apologies, at noon on Monday, May 31, after having spent 19 hours in the South Chicago jail.

Film Probably Preserved.

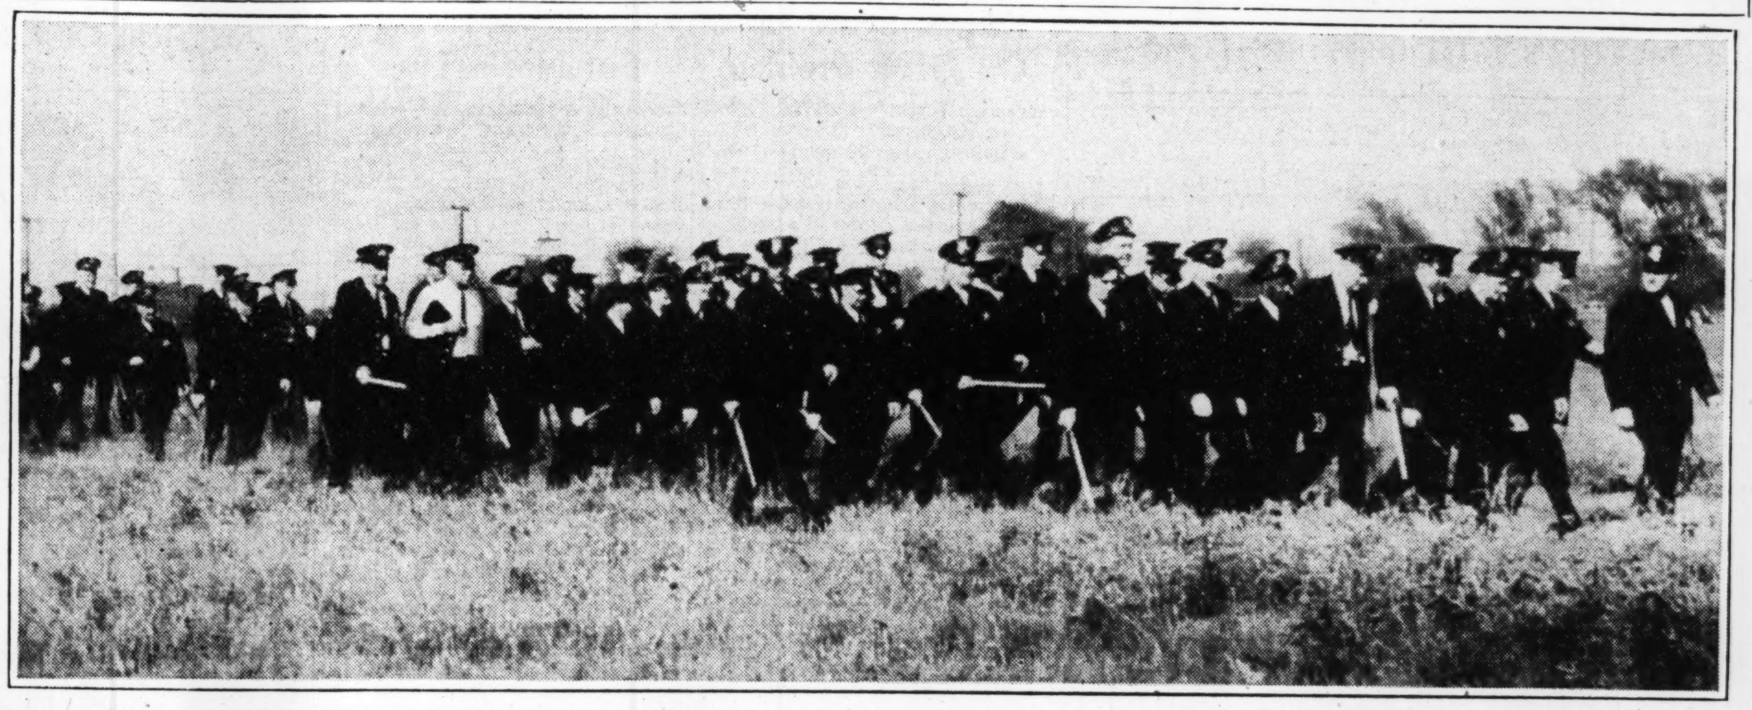
"My camera was returned to me upon presentation of my receipt, and I noticed immediately that the footage-indicator stood at 'Empty.' Further investigation proved that the film had been removed from the camera. The sprocket guides were still locked in position, which should indicate that the film was run through to the end before removal—in which case, it is probably not destroyed. Before leaving the South Chicago station, I made a strong complaint against this illegal seizure of my private property and demanded the return of the film. After a most impressive but fruitless search of the safe, Capt. Tobin promised to investigate and to do everything possible to locate it and have it returned to me.

"(Signed) CHESTER B. FISK."

When an investigator for the LaFollette Committee asked the police about the films, he was told Capt. Tobin was holding them for the State's Attorney. When the writer asked Capt. Tobin if that was the case, he said: "No, I'm holding them for the LaFollette Committee."

(Robert Wohlforth, secretary of the La Follette Committee, was quoted in Washington Friday as saying: "We have obtained the films made by the Rev. Chester Fisk during the affray.")

The Return from a Bloody Victory



Eye-Witnesses Tell of Killing of Steel Strikers

me in the side, and hit me across the back. I still have big blue bruises, and I have constant pains in my back.

"As I tried to rise, a policeman grabbed me by each arm, and half dragged me to a patrol wagon. One of them said: 'We ought to send all you damn Reds back where you came from.'"

The news reel makes it plain that a period had elapsed here concerning which Mrs. Marshall has no recollection. One of the most vivid shots in the film shows her staggering groggily among the dead and wounded, and people who had thrown themselves on the ground to avoid gunfire, with blood streaming down the side of her face, while a policeman punches her in the back with his riot stick, shouting at her.

"The first wagon to which they took me was full," she went on, "so they took me to one which was empty. I sat in the corner next to the rear door. I could see the policemen out on the field, still beating men on the ground.

Wounded Four Deep in Wagon.

"They began loading the wounded into my wagon. They threw them in like sacks of potatoes. The first one was a big fellow, who had been shot twice in the abdomen. They kept piling them in until they were stacked on the floor four or five feet deep. Sixteen wounded men were placed in that wagon with me. The big fellow on the bottom screamed continuously until we reached the hospital."

Another witness made an affidavit that the police deliberately drove all over South Chicago before delivering the wounded at a hospital which could have been reached in a few minutes. He estimated the patrol wagon covered 40 miles before arriving at its destination.

"I tried to pull the wounded men around to make them a little more comfortable," Mrs. Marshall went on. "Three of them gave me telephone numbers, and asked me to call their families when we got to the hospital. On top of the pile was a young fellow—just a boy—who was bleeding badly. His clothing was saturated with blood, and he was turning pale.

Boy Died in Patrol Wagon.

"I got his head on my lap, and asked if there was anything I could do for him. He said very faintly that he would like a cigarette. I got the pack out of his pocket, but it was soaked with blood. I asked if he wanted me to call anyone when he reached the hospital, and he answered, in a very weak voice:

"'No, never mind—you're a good kid.' His face was starting to turn blue. I think it was the first time I was frightened. His jaw began to droop, and I tried to hold his mouth shut. A little later he sort of mumbled: 'Oh, my mother!' Then he fell away from me, and I could see he was dead. I found out later that his name was Kenneth Reed."

In affidavits to attorneys for the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, other workers have stated that Kenneth Reed, 21 years old, married, father of a five-weeks-old child, was shot through the groin, the bullet severing an artery. They state that other workers placed him in a first aid car, bearing a Red Cross sign, and started with him to the hospital. They further state that police stopped the car, dragged Reed out, and placed him in a patrol wagon, and that, upon its arrival at the Burnside hospital, more than two hours later, he was pronounced dead from loss of blood.

In the Hospital.

"After what seemed all afternoon," Mrs. Marshall resumed, "we got to the hospital. The men were dumped out on the concrete floor of the public clinic. The police dragged them in, and laid them out in rows. There were no cots, and for a few minutes, no doctors or nurses. There was a dining room just off the clinic, and I ran in there and grabbed up a pitcher of water and all the napkins I could see. Then a doctor came in.

"I found a little room with a telephone in it, and I went in and locked the door, and began calling the numbers the men had given me. One of the cops heard me. He pounded on the door, and shouted for me to come out, but I kept on telephoning until I was finished.

"A lot of doctors and nurses came in at this point, and one of them sewed up my head. That same policeman started to take me out, but the doctor said: 'No, she can't go yet—I've got to take an X-ray of her head.' He told me to sit outside in the hall.

"A bunch of police were standing at each end of the hall. A detective from downtown came rushing in and shouted: 'Who in the name of hell ordered this God damned shooting?' One of the cops said:

"'Shut up, you mug—they're not all dead yet.'

"Up to that time I had really not noticed the effect of the gas, but now I became very nauseated.

Locked Up but Not Booked.

Mrs. Marshall was later taken to the Burnside Police Station, and locked in a cell before the hospital doctor could take the X-ray. However, she was not formally "booked." This is an original device of the Chicago police, whereby prisoners are prevented from communicating with their lawyers and families for an indefinite period, and even their whereabouts remains a secret from all except the police.

Mrs. Marshall remained in the cell through Sunday night until Tuesday morning, her lawyer being refused admittance. On Tuesday she was taken to Bertillon headquarters, finger-printed and photographed.

She was returned to the Burnside station the same day, and "booked," but held in a cell until Wednesday morning, when, with many others, she was arraigned on a charge of "conspiracy to commit an unlawful act."

Along with 64 others of the strikers and sympathizers arrested that day, she is scheduled to appear for a hearing on the charge June 23. The maximum penalty on conviction is five years in prison and $2000 fine.

Obviously, the stories told by other survivors cannot be given in such detail as Mrs. Marshall's, because of space limitations, but the essential portions of some need not be omitted. Among the witnesses were six seniors from the Chicago Theological Seminary, a unit of the University of Chicago. These students—three men and three girls—as a part of their preparation to enter the ministry of the Congregational Church, have specialized in the social sciences. Seeing an opportunity to make a first-hand study of a strike situation, they attended the mass meeting, and witnessed the subsequent events.

First Shots Fired by Police.

One of them, Clayton Gill, made his way through the marchers and reached the head of the line just as the shooting began. He took several photographs. In an affidavit to the LaFollette committee he said:

"In going through this whole body of strikers, I kept my eyes open for weapons. I saw clubs and small rocks, but absolutely no other weapons. So far as I know, the strikers made no attack on the police. The first explosions that occurred were those of a sudden barrage from the police. I did not know at first what they were—whether they were from revolvers or tear-gas guns. I was slightly gassed, and the police were charging, about 20 feet distant. I turned and ran back with the strikers, all of whom were running except the injured and those who fell.

"I saw one man on his back, on the ground. Over him stood three police, beating him with their clubs. This was at a distance from 200 to 300 feet from me.

"No strikers, after the opening barrage routed them, advanced upon a policeman or attacked him. In fact, I saw no such incident at any time, excepting the cases of some who had stumbled or fallen, or were caught protecting themselves from the police when the latter came upon them."

Police Refuse to Talk.

The second student, Marilee Kone, was back in the crowd, and saw less. She tells of hearing a marcher shout: "Come on, we'll get through this time." She asked him: "What do you want to get through for?" and he replied: "To picket."

She tells of bullets whistling overhead, and striking the ground beyond. Other witnesses confirm this statement, which furnishes the basis for a charge by strikers that shots were fired from the top of the Republic mill buildings. James L. Hyland, district manager for the company, emphatically denied to the writer than any shots were fired from the mill.

After the affair, Miss Kone and two other students returned to the field, and made an unsuccessful attempt to interview some of the police. They were told:

"Go ask the Communists—they started it."

The stories of the remaining students — Gordon Bennett, David French, Celine Frey and Atossa Herring—are practically identical with Miss Kone's. Talking to this writer, Bennett was positive about the bullets whizzing overhead and striking the ground beyond, and in his opinion they could not have been fired by police on the other side of the main body of demonstrators.

Bullets Hit Ground.

Following are pertinent excerpts from statements and affidavits made by other eye-witnesses:

MANUEL TRBOVICH, striking Inland Worker: "When our people came up to the police line there was a lot of stalling, and people were milling around, and yelling 'C I O.' The procession made a feeble effort toward the police line, but didn't get anywhere. A patrol wagon started toward the line, and the shooting began. I heard someone say:

"'They're shooting blanks.' Then men and women started falling all around, and someone else said: 'Blanks, Hell! They're shooting bullets.'

"People were falling, and the police were beating them on the ground. Nobody tried to make a defense. We had nothing to defend ourselves with. I saw no weapons in our crowd."

(Throughout the news reel there appear but two isolated instances of resistance. In one a marcher carrying a placard on a stick uses it in an attempt to fend off a charging policeman; in the other, a man throws a rock, and grabs up a club from the ground. Both were beaten to the ground and clubbed ferociously after they fell).

Beaten Into Unconsciousness.

JOSEPH HICKEY, striking employe of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co.: "I had been picketing at the Youngstown plant and was on my way home. I saw the parade, and joined it. I was too far back to hear the conversation between the police and the head of the line. All at once there was a volley of shots. There must have been 20 or 30 before the people could move to run.

"As I was running back, a gas bomb came down right by me, and I was caught in the cloud of gas. As soon as I could see, I noticed a woman on the ground. She had been shot through the leg, and it was doubled under her. Three policemen came up and started clubbing her. Each time they raised their clubs she would scream: 'Don't hit me!' But they kept beating her, and pretty soon her voice faded away. When they started to leave, I went over to help her, and those cops rushed back. Two of them knocked me down with their sticks. Then they ordered me to get up. Each time I got up, they knocked me down again. Finally I stayed down. I rolled over and tried to protect my head with my arms. They beat me until I was unconscious.

"I woke up in the Burnside Hospital. A doctor was clipping my hair, getting ready to sew me up. He said:

Man's Brains Knocked Out.

The news reel, as told in Wednesday's Post-Dispatch, reproduces a harrowing scene in which a heavy, middle-aged man, caught far in the rear of the retreating marchers, and separated from them by dozens of milling policemen, makes a heroic and desperate effort to run the gantlet. He almost reaches safety before he is finally trapped by bluecoats, and beaten unmercifully.

In most instances of individual beatings, the demeanor of the police was grimly methodical and businesslike—somewhat as if they were killing snakes. But in the case of this man there was an impression of vindictiveness, as if they were angered by his tremendous effort to escape.

The victim was identified later in an undertaking establishment as Samuel Popovich, 45 years old, a striking steel worker. His skull was crushed, and a portion of his brains had escaped on the ground.

JAKE SEKULICH, striking Inland worker: I saw Popovich killed. He was running away. One of the police overtook him, and knocked him down, and then they all began clubbing him. Popovich was not fighting—he was only trying to get away."

Last week a taxicab driver seized Popovich's widow as she tried to leap from a dock into the Chicago River. At the hospital to which she was taken—and where she still remains—she explained: "I don't want to live without my husband."

"Let Them Have It."

The following excerpt is from the affidavit of a man who has remained at work in the Republic plant, but who, for reasons unexplained, joined the Memorial day parade. His name is signed to the affidavit, but for obvious reasons is not given here. He states:

"I was up close to the front row when the shooting started. Our head men were saying: 'Let us through. We want to picket. We demand the right to picket peacefully.' Capt. Mooney was telling them they couldn't go through. The argument lasted only a few minutes, and then Capt. Mooney shouted:

"'All right—let them have it.' That was the signal for the police to start firing into the crowd. Some of our boys started to go to the right. Capt. Mooney waved to the police to outflank them, and they did."

Machine Gun Fire.

"It was at this time," the witness continues, "that I first heard machine gun fire. It came from the direction of the Republic mill."

HOWARD BANNISTER, striking Inland worker: "I served 19 months in the regular army, and was stationed near a target range. I am thoroughly familiar with the sound of machine gun fire, and it is my opinion that I heard machine gun fire that day."

RAYMOND HARDEN, striking steel worker: "The parade was not lined up in any regular formation. The women and children were all mixed up with the men. A few had clubs. When the column reached the place where the police were lined up, it stopped. I couldn't hear what was said. The people began to scatter over the prairie.

Clubs, Bullets and Bombs.

"All at once a flying wedge of policemen began clubbing into the right side of the line, and at the same time threw gas bombs into the crowd. Then the police started shooting, and everybody turned to run. The police would fire, reload, charge ahead for several yards, fire and reload again.

"I hadn't run far before I got a bullet in the left leg. I got a little further before I became faint, and fell on my face. A policeman came up and hit me on the head with his club. Everything went black for a while, but when I came to the police were still charging past me, shooting at the people, who had dispersed all over the prairie.

"My leg was bleeding terribly, but I was afraid to raise up, for fear they would get me. Finally some young boys came along. They used my belt to make a tourniquet for my leg and then went and got a car to take me to the hospital."

Flag Bearer Clubbed.

JOHN LATIDO, one of the two marchers carrying American flags at the head of the parade, stated: "The police stopped us, and said we couldn't go any further. I didn't say a word—just held the flag up in the air. I was clubbed, and went down. I tried to get up, and pick up the flag at the same time, and they clubbed me down again. I lay there for a while, then got up and ran. That was when they shot me in the back. That's all I remember."

In the second house from the corner, where the broken road trail curves into Burley avenue, live the Egan, Fleming and Jolly families. Thus, they were behind the police lines. Two of the men are striking Republic workers. James Eagan, an elderly man who is unemployed, told the writer:

"During the parleying between the marchers and the police, I was standing in the front yard. I couldn't hear what was said, but it only lasted a few minutes when a police captain hollered:

"'All right, men—let them have it!' That was when the shooting started."

Mrs. Robert Fleming said: "I was out in the yard when the shooting started. Just after the first shots were fired, a shower of small rocks came from back in the crowd, and fell among the police in the rear. I ran in the house so I wouldn't get hit. From a window upstairs I could see the police kicking and clubbing those poor fellows on the ground. It was terrible."

Fight on Preceding Friday.

Mrs. Prudence Jolly witnessed the encounter the preceding Friday, when, apparently, the demonstrators offered much stouter resistance than on the succeeding Sunday—and thereby may have helped provoke the ferocious temper exhibited by the police on the latter occasion. One striker, she said, was left lying unconscious after the Friday affray, his face almost touching a pool of stagnant water. She called to a policeman: "Move that man—do you want him to drown?" The officer, she said, kicked the man in the side, and replied: "Oh, he's all right."

A Horrifying Incident.

One horrifying incident recorded on the film of Sunday's events does not appear to be mentioned in any of the oral or written statements of eye-witnesses, although it occurred directly in the foreground of the camera, and must have been observed by many persons. In the front line of demonstrators, only a few feet from the flag bearers, is a man with a placard inscribed: "Republic Steel vs. the People."

As the roar of the opening volley is recorded by the film's sound track, a policeman, whose back is to the camera, whips out his pistol and fires. The man with the placard falls, dropping his sign. For several minutes he lies motionless on his back, as the tide of pursuers recedes across the prairie. Policemen glance at him indifferently. He seems to be dead.

Presently a new policeman comes up. He looks down, and as he does so, the prone figure moves slightly. For a fleeting moment the policeman registers surprise. Then he takes one quick step forward, and smashes the wounded man's face with his club.

Fires at Fleeing Strikers.

Behind the houses on Burley avenue is an alley, but its end is barred from the prairie by a high wire fence. Moreover, between the fence and the place where the marchers halted, is a bog containing open water. Frank McCulloch, a lawyer who has attained national prominence in connection with the social service work of religious organizations, was stationed in the alley, about 30 feet from the fence.

Also inside the fence, but directly against it, was a group of policemen. After the first shots were fired, and the marchers were in full retreat, McCulloch saw one of these policemen deliberately empty his pistol at them. The attorney took a photograph as the officer reloaded his gun.

Official Statements.

"South" Chicago is as much a part of the city as the loop; it is a locality, not a political sub-division.

On the day following the affray Mayor Edward Kelly, Democratic boss of Chicago, issued the following statement: "The only duty of the administration and the Police Department is to protect life and property. Under Illinois law, peaceful picketing is allowed, but it is a question whether 2000 men, armed with bricks and gear shift levers are peaceful pickets. My information is that two policemen were knocked down before the trouble started."

Capt. John J. Prendergast, head of Chicago's uniformed police, to whom Captains Mooney and Kilroy were responsible for the conduct of the police detailed there, said:

"The police were trying to prevent trouble. The men had orders to leave their guns in their holsters, and not to use their clubs, but when a man is on the ground, surrounded by an angry mob, self-preservation cancels his previous orders. The Police Department was merely acting to preserve order."

Asked by this writer for his version, Capt. Mooney said: "Capt. Prendergast will do whatever talking is to be done."

No Firearms Seized.

Among almost 100 demonstrators arrested by the police, no firearms were found. However, Capt. Mooney has in his possession a stack of sticks, to one of which a safety razor blade is precariously affixed—and he has a sack of bricks—all of which, he says, will be offered as evidence that the marchers were disposed to homicide.

After publicly announcing that he intended to fix blame for the affair on "Communist agitators in the C I O," Coroner Frank J. Walsh convened an inquest, heard a few witnesses and adjourned. Nearly three weeks have elapsed since the event and the inquest has not been resumed.

Upon the La Follette Committee, operating in an atmosphere far removed from that of Chicago, will fall the real responsibility and opportunity for officially establishing the facts of one of the bloodiest episodes in the history of industrial strife in America.

A Notable Study Of the Medici

A CARDINAL OF THE MEDICI. By Susan Hicks Beach. (The Macmillan Co., New York.)

INDIVIDUALLY and as a family, the Medici, whose history reflects European political, ecclesiastical and cultural development for three and a half centuries, have had many biographers. Now Mrs. Hicks Beach, using skillfully her great knowledge and understanding of life in sixteenth century Italy, gives us the dramatic story of the Cardinal Ippolito, a Medici almost forgotten by history. Written in narrative form as the memoirs of Ippolito's nameless mother, the tragic story presents a living picture of an era.

Ippolito de Medici was a true son of his house. Possessed of the charm, brains, and forceful personality that characterized the outstanding members of his line, he was cheated of what might have been an honored place in the world's records by the intrigues of his cousin, the infamous Medici Pope, Clement VII.

Born the illegitimate and only son of that banished ruler, Guiliano the Gentle, Ippolito was the last direct male heir to the older branch of the family. He was raised a princeling and became the third Medici to be installed, and shortly thereafter banished, as ruler of Florence. Only 18 at the time, he resolved to wait patiently until a day when the Medici star would rise again in the Florentine heavens.

In his arrogant dreaming, however, Ippolito had reckoned without his cousin Guilio, then Clement VII, who had his own ambitions for his illegitimate son, the ugly and loutish Alessandro. To further that ambition, Clement tricked Ippolito into taking the cardinal's cap, and in a dastardly coup made Alessandro Duke of Florence. In spite of this failure, the popular Ippolito persevered, and saw the coveted honor almost in his hands when a poisoner's draught ended his life. He died in 1535, a weary and embittered young man of 25.

Mrs. Hicks Beach has hewn close to the historical truth in her account of Ippolito's cruel story. To these synthetic memoirs she has given the illusion of reality by employing the medieval idiom and vocabulary throughout. The reader moves, absorbed, through the wondrous world of sixteenth century Italy—a world distinguished by great movements in state and church, by great names in arts and letters, and by the stupendous show that was the pageantry of the age.

The Answer Is: Fireworks

CHIRON THE CENTAUR. By Benjamin DeCasseres. (Blackstone Pubs., New York.)

HOWEVER sorry one may feel for a cruelly overworked epithet, nevertheless amazing is the word for Benjamin DeCasseres. Admire or detest him, view him from any angle, and still the brief description fits.

He is amazing, first of all, because there is only one of him; and it is reasonable to suspect that if by chance a second should appear, the man would immediately find some audacious way of being utterly different. He must be the lonely arch-anarch or nothing. For him, it would be no fun marching in the human procession if everyone were not out of step except DeCasseres.

But he is amazing for other reasons also—for erudition, for originality of thought, for beauty of expression, for the truly terrific impact of his verbal assaults on "the sorry scheme of things entire." He is perhaps the supreme rejecter of wooden nickels in this our era of scrambled values. Moreover, if he is to be credited, all nickels are wooden. It is not inconceivable that some saner future may regard him as the major voice of a faithless time's despair.

Long well-known to those who delight in literary caviar, he began a year ago last January to issue a series of monthly pamphlets apparently with the purpose of setting forth his attitude toward everything under the sun—or over it, for that matter. And if ever the Universe takes time out to read the series it is going to be highly indignant!

DeCasseres' philosophy may be stated in a few words from his latest brochure: "Time makes all things obsolete except Illusion." Extremely practical people, who are the salt of the earth, might inquire why the extended series for a message so simple. The answer is: Fireworks. And truly, when De Casseres is in full eruption it's a spectacle for gods! But, alas, this man who has been through the universe with a lantern reports that there are no gods. As a matter of fact, there is really nothing but DeCasseres building such terrific glooms and glories out of words that even he must sometimes pause a moment to indulge in awe.

It would not be surprising if, in one of those awful hushes, some mere groundling were heard to squeak the question: As between the happy and the sad illusion, why not choose the former?

But if DeCasseres should succumb to the logic of that question, there'd be one less thrilling thinker and master-wordsman on this planet!

A Work of Power And Splendor

DAMIEN THE LEPER. By John Farrow. (Sheed and Ward, New York.)

IT is unfortunate that goodness is so generally considered mere avoidance of evil. This negative view of virtue tends to render good synonomous with colorless. Most popular biographies, it follows, deal with sinners rather than saints. There is, however, a positive sort of goodness, a virtue of militant and eager activity, that is more potent to stir the imagination than any selfish exploit. Socrates, Paul, Francis, Jane Addams had this vital, productive goodness. Mr. Farrow has written a book that is vibrant with this power of living faith, fruitful goodness.

In the nineteenth century leprosy was one of the very serious problems of the Hawiian Islands. The prevalence of the disease made the establishment of a segregated colony imperative. All infected persons were confined on the island of Molokai. Here the most meager provision was made for their sustenance. There was no sanitary, medical or religious direction. As might be expected, hope gone, every sort of filth and vice flourished. There were in the colony a number of Catholic lepers, and the church determined that they needed a priest. Damien volunteered to take the assignment, although it meant entombment and inevitable infection.

With no heroics he went to Molokai in 1873 and lived there for 16 years, working and caring for the lepers. He was 39 when he went. At 49 he died—of leprosy. His work, however, goes on. His saintliness awaits only the official confirmation of canonization. "Greater love" . . .

Mr. Farrow, an executive of the motion picture industry and the husband of Maureen O'Sullivan, writes vigorously and reverently. One feels that the book has been undertaken in all high seriousness. It is a work of power and splendor.

Dream of Escape From Earth

ZERO TO EIGHTY. By E. F. Northrup. (Scientific Publishing Co., Princeton, N. J.)

ALTHOUGH the Russians have recently shown that there are new worlds to conquer on this planet, some men continue to feel that earthly possibilities are meager and toy with the fancy of making jaunts into outer space.

E. F. Northrup may be called one of the more conservative of these dreamers. In the imaginary biography of one Akkad Pseudoman born in 1920 and writing in 2000, Northrup offers the account of a trip around the moon by Pseudoman and a companion, in a projectile first impelled through the stratosphere by an electric cannon, and then propelled by rockets. Pseudoman thereby fulfilled his life's ambition, which one gathers is Northrup's, and discovered that the far side of the moon is not different from that permanently facing the earth. So what?

The primary purpose of the book is to expound the author's belief that, since propulsion by rockets requires too much fuel in proportion to load carried, his electric cannon offers a way to space exploration.

A technical supplement contains much information for anyone who enjoys scientific experimentation, and the book should afford interesting reading for those who feel mankind is ready to wander into space.

LONG LIVE THE KING. By Alice Dalgliesh and Lois Malloy. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

A PICTURE-STORY book for children about rulers of England from the early days to now.

Was It Greatness Or Futility?

PEDLAR'S PROGRESS, The Life of Bronson Alcott. By Odell Shepard. (Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)

THE end of one's nose is a wonderful place. On it, by steady contemplation, one can reconstruct the universe; one can even discover truth. Clothes may be shabby, the house a hovel, dinner may be only a carrot or two, and wife and children may be rag-tail, but there are virtue, nobility, even magnificence—there, on the end of one's nose.

The system is called New England idealism, or sometimes the Concord school of transcendentalism, out of Plato by way of Swedenborg, and Bronson Alcott was the dean of it. It follows that he was a failure in every mundane thing he ever tackled and it happens that he was a simple-minded man of great personal charm. Adversities made him gentler, stupidity but drove him to more rarefied refuge within himself. That he is now remembered chiefly as the father of Louisa May Alcott, who herself has not stood time well, that the account of his life has a flavor of unreality, that his goodness seems faintly absurd, demonstrate the differences between him and his day that have grown greater with the years.

Odell Shepard, who tells his story, believes that Americans forget that America has produced idealists and that idealists in their way are as truly a product of their time and place as are the more mechanically-minded. He offers the Alcott biography by way of evidence, if not proof, of this thesis.

Your reviewer must disagree. That Alcott had advanced ideas on teaching may be granted without conceding the validity of his ideas—of the angelic theory of childhood, for instance; that he was dean of the Concord philosophers implies no acceptance of his notions. The realists of "the St. Louis movement" of fifty-odd years ago — Harris, Snider and Brockmeyer — picked his rosy wooziness to nothing without much trouble—just what did his fine words mean? — but Alcott's world remained on the end of his nose. It was pleasanter there. Aside from the fact of his warm personal influences, Alcott's life tots up futility.

Shepard, the biographer, does not share this conviction. He presents the testimony on which it is based, but his sympathy will have it that Alcott was a great man. Perhaps Shepard sees the forest without singling out the trees. In any event, he has given a cohesive, integrated, definitive statement on Bronson Alcott.

TOURING WITH TENT AND TRAILER. By Winfield Kimball and Maurice Decker. (Whittlesey House, New York.)

The charm of this book comes from the authors' familiarity with touring before the days of good roads when trailers were unknown. They give plenty of sage advice about cooking and kitchen equipment, about the care of car and tent, and about the purchase and handling of a trailer. Yet their interest is largely reminscent. "We remember . . ." they begin, and tell a yarn about a car stuck in a mudhole near San Angelo. "In the early days . . ." they say, and recall an encounter with a windstorm or a trail not yet made into a road. What days those were! And how happily the writers revel in the memory of them! No wonder they can forewarn the novice about any possible eventuality, from rubber mattresses to insurance! With pictures and yarns, they make a seasoned camper itch for the road again.

Throws Some Light On Great Problem

ECONOMIC PLANNING; YESTERDAY, TODAY, TOMORROW. Edited by Findlay MacKenzie. (Prentice-Hall, New York.)

IT seems that most advocates of economic planning regard it as being in the nature of a problem in simple arithmetic, and believe the solution will produce, without any further effort, the perfect society. This collection of essays effectively discredits that view. These authors point out that economic planning, in order to work successfully, demands a complete revision of the "culture complex." It necessitates, as Lewis Mumford points out in the preface, new intellectual technics and new social goals.

The first two sections of the book deal with the history of economic planning. The third is devoted to discussing specific maladjustments in our economy and to making suggestions as to how they should be corrected. The essays on credit and its control are especially well-written. The fourth section considers the broader aspects of planning and control. The question of the duty and the function of a Government in planning, the function and nature of propaganda, and the analysis of the theory and practice of planning in Socialist, Communist and Fascist states are thoroughly investigated. Finally, in this group there are some essays dealing with the effects which economic planning may be expected to have upon the whole "cultural complex."

Especially worth reading are the essays by Lasswell on propaganda, Heimann on Socialism and Democracy, Cassel on the implications of protection, Simons on credit control, and Gideonse on the planning of international economic relations.

This work makes no attempt to present the details of a planned system. Indeed, there is some disagreement among the writers as to just what should be done. The book deserves a careful reading because it reflects the attitudes of able students of the question and indicates the magnitude of the problem to be solved.

Making a Living But Not a Life

BREAD AND A SWORD. By Evelyn Scott. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

IN "EVA GAY" and "Breathe Upon These Slain," Evelyn Scott undertook a study of the relation between the artist and his environment, with particular emphasis on the field of contemporary letters. Her third novel on this subject, "Bread and a Sword," continues and concludes this exhaustive study.

The story is that of Alexander Williams, an American novelist, who refuses to bow down before the commercialism and seventh-rate literary canons of his time. In her portrayal of his poverty and bitterness, Mrs. Scott has attempted to show the fate of any disinterested artist of our generation, who cannot write except in his own way and for purposes that may give his work a kind of permanence. It is her conviction, Mrs. Scott says, "that art and religion come a cropper at the same juncture . . . when artist, priest and prophet are forced to a pact with circumstances to insure subsistence." And Williams, whose first novel has won the praise of the most able critics in England and America, is at the end reduced to landscape gardening as a means of gaining his livelihood.

Mrs. Scott is extraordinarily clear-sighted, with reference to specific detail, as well as within a broad perspective. She is capable of thinking that is brilliant and orderly, and her documentation is as thorough as one might expect. For some reason, however, this novel is less memorable as fiction than for its intellectual content. Williams' complicated arguments with his wife, his casual love affairs, and a large amount of other peripheral material do not impress the reader as integral parts of a whole. The most valuable section of the book is probably the long "Author's Preface," in which Mrs. Scott discusses mechanization of society and the individual, and the influence this may have in the future upon creative writing and the arts.

Broadway in a Genial Mood

EXCURSION. A Play in Three Acts. By Victor Wolfson. (Random House, New York.)

HAVING WONDERFUL TIME. A Play in Three Acts. By Arthur Kober. (Random House, New York.)

HISTORIES of the 1936-37 theater season on Broadway are likely to note that with the first signs of spring came a warmth and geniality that Broadway had not known in years, a willingness to think of the litle man who does everyday's work and to hand him credit for plugging ahead, in spite of it all.

Two plays in this class were hits—Arthur Kober's "Having Wonderful Time," which came out in February, and Victor Wolfson's "Excursion," which followed in April. Back in the winter, there was the comedy success, "You Can't Take It With You," which won the Pulitzer Prize. It, too, takes human nature for what it is.

In "You Can't Take It With You," Grandpa Vanderhof's cuckoo family is in the leisure class, free to do as it pleases, and that makes the play. Kober and Wolfson deal with the Genus Bronx, which gets only Sunday off during the week and two weeks' vacation in August. "Excursion" sends its pleasure-seekers to Coney Island and "Having Wonderful Time" to Camp Kare-Free in the Berkshires.

Wolfson's play, about one Capt. Obadiah Rich of the S. S. Happiness and his decision to do something positive about these "prisoners of the city," is the stronger. An excellent fantasy with the right amount of reality, it bears also a sound philosophy. It lets Capt. Rich and his passengers on the Coney Island boat head for a haven in the Caribbean instead of going home, and has them rounded up by the Coast Guard. But each individual discovers something about himself through the experience that will help him carry on.

"Having Wonderful Time" could be boiled down to the Hollywood formula of boy-meets-girl, boy-loses-girl, boy-gets-girl, except that its characters all demand sympathy. Perhaps the reader will not give such dripping sympathy as Marc Connelly, producer of the play, does in a foreword, but Kober, by his keen ear and faithful typewriter, has managed to convey those things that produce a fellow feeling.

Knew the West A Century Ago

LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF GEORGE NIDEVER. Edited by William Henry Ellison. (University of California Press, Berkeley, Cal.)

THE Bancroft Library at the University of California contains many manuscript treasures. Certainly the most important and interesting of these are the old timers' narratives dictated to Hubert Howe Bancroft's assistants when that busy historian was preparing his histories of the Far Western States. One of them appears in the present volume.

George Nidever was a pioneer in Missouri and Arkansas, a trapper and explorer in the West, a hunter of grizzlies, participant in the famous battle with the Blackfeet in Pierre's Hole, member of Capt. Joe Walker's expedition to California in 1833, otter hunter on the Pacific islands, soldier with Fremont, miner, and early settler in Santa Barbara. He was born in Tennessee in 1802 and died at Santa Barbara in 1883. His life was one long adventure in the days when the West was in the making.

The editor has done a splendid piece of work and his footnotes are as desirable a contribution to Western Americana as the text of the old man's story, which was originally recorded in 1878 by Edward F. Murray.

Humor and Pathos Of Negro Life

STRANGE NEGRO STORIES OF THE OLD DEEP SOUTH. By H. D. Howell. (Wetzel Publishing Co., Los Angeles.)

BETTER known to his friends as "Pop," H. D. Howell, a former traveling salesman with a natural gift for spinning yarns, has combined in this volume six short stories that present a clear reflection of Dixie. His Negro characters are revealed in their picturesque and amusing immaturity, and his episodes, simple in narrative execution, are touched with humor, drama, and pathos.

"Little Alf" is concerned with a miserable, crippled child, who leads a self-effacing existence, constantly reminded by his addled mother that he is "no good to be borned" There is plenty of excitement around the pathetic central figure. "Granny's Minstrel Boy" tells of a carefully reared little black fellow who thwarts his grandmother's ambition to make a preacher of him when he finds his ideal in a minstrel showman.

All of the stories are individual and charming in their delineation of poverty and intrigue, gratitude and courage. The little volume, now sombre, now glowing, is as "Southern as an old Alabama mammy."

Educating Man's Best Friend

HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DOG. By H. F. Owen. (The Grimes-Joyce Co., Kansas City.)

ANYONE who has been saddened, angered, alarmed or chagrined by the loutish behavior of his specimen of Man's Best Friend, should find this book interesting and perhaps a source of fresh hope. On its pages are set forth procedures calculated to convert a confounded nuisance that muddies people's clothes, chases automobiles and responds to orders by sitting like a bump on a log, into a decent, useful, companionable creature which is worthy of respect as well as affection. The point is that these procedures appear to be easy to carry out — "easy for dog and master," says the subtitle. As for their efficacy, it can be said that the author, a professional dog trainer, uses these devices in schooling his charges at his kennels in St. Louis County, and he has a wide reputation for proficiency.

An important basis of the "Owen Method" seems to be the theory that almost any dog wants to please its master; and once the habit of obedience is established, the problem of controlling the dog's conduct is largely one of making it understand what he wants done. The system recognizes the limitations of canine intelligence. It calls for no beatings or harsh punishments. Neither does it provide for lavish rewards of food—praise is usually sufficient. It does require a little patience and interest on the part of the master.

The dog is trained to behave properly in the house, to come promptly when called, to take and maintain the proper position when commanded to "heel," to sit or lie down at the order. Many owners would be well pleased if they could depend on their dogs merely to do these things. But if they want their animals to have additional accomplishments, these lessons provide the essential foundation for a higher education. The book goes on from here to tell how to teach a dog to do a number of entertaining and sometimes useful tricks.

—Keith Kerman.

Not Worldly Wise, But Wise

THE CASTLE OF CONTENTMENT. By Jaefermester Plov. Translated from the Danish by Astrid Sawyer and Llewellyn Jones. (Willet, Clark & Co., New York.)

A BLUE anemone in a sheltered wood, the winter sunshine in a well-kept barn, the pleasure of sailing alone at night—these are the things, it seems, that make copy for a newspaper columnist in Denmark. And these sketches by Gunnar Nislev (the other is a pen name) were voted the most-read feature of the important Danish paper where they originally appeared. To an American, the most surprising thing about them is that they were written for adults.

The author is, himself, a practical farmer, and he writes unaffectedly of the pleasure, the worry, and the humor of country life. He notes the sweet promise of the spring fields, the bad weather for the harvest, the flight of the storks and the first heavy snow. He is glad for the lessons of life and death which animals and country life teach his children. He quotes an old Danish hymn: "Teach me, O woods, to wither gladly."

The work, as translated, has none of the technical brilliance we, in this country, expect from our feature writers. The style is, in fact, a little old-fashioned. But it is a book that is good to read. The humor is not flashing, but gentle; the philosophy, not worldly wise, but wise.

—Catharine Gunn.

Very Remarkable Work of Fiction

AMERICAN DREAM. By Michael Foster. (William Morrow & Co., New York.)

BEWILDERED by life's complexity and its apparent futility, struggling against indifference, Shelby Thrall turns his back upon the future and seeks inspiration in the dusty records of his involved ancestral history. He reads fantastic tales of strange islands in distant seas, of Indian warfare in the pioneer Dakotas, of early American hardship and injustice in conflict with men of vision and principle. All these are woven together to reveal a vital heritage.

The numerous divergent episodes of the story are drawn skillfully together into a surprisingly simple design. The ghosts of two generations are endowed with animation in an adroit projection of personalities. The author's absorbing philosophy has the sincerity of wisdom and experience, and his ability to transform memories into pulsating actuality is remarkable.

Throughout the saga of the Thrall family, the reader gropes as feverishly as the perplexed Shelby for a justification of his elusive American dream, a Utopian faith that "a time might come when men would live and deal among themselves with justice, tenderness and truth." Without sermonizing, this message finds its way from author to reader and leaves the impression of a warm and reassuring handclasp.

Estimable as was Michael Foster's first short novel, "Forgive Adam," it was as a shadow cast before the superb reality of the present work.

—Norma E. Sante.

Old-Fashioned Gentility

ROARING TOWER. By Stella Gibbons. (Longmans, Green & Co., New York.)

MISS GIBBONS' present collection of short stories might best be described as genteel. They are chiefly concerned with upper middle class Englishmen who achieve happiness or success or a new point of view by some fortuitous circumstance. There are also several sketches written in a more realistic vein. To consider a cross section, "Saturday Afternoon," Miss Isobel and Miss Ann," "Spring" and "The Visiting Moon" deal respectively with the stifled affections of an ignorant working man and his wife, the armed friendship of two rival belles who grow to depend upon each other for companionship, the tortured adolescence of a circus Fat Girl, and the yearning of a successful woman to recapture the wonder and force of her childhood dreams.

A pleasant atmosphere of old-fashioned gentility surrounds most of the characters, and some who have for a time been sidetracked are restored to the right direction by deus ex machina devices. Miss Gibbons does not hesitate to point a moral by the use of fantasy or of supernatural forces. Yet the author of "Cold Comfort Farm" has lost neither her sense of humor nor her analytical detachment, and her whimsical fantasy never becomes sentimental. With great good will toward all, she puts her faith in the power of an omniscient spirit to untangle the difficulties which enmesh her characters, and in a pleasant, unobtrusive manner endows such homely virtues as humility and simplicity with meaning in the modern world.

A Magnificent Adventure

THE white men who went, 133 years ago, where no white men had gone before, were Meriwether Lewis, William Clark and the members of their expedition. It was, as the world well knows, one of the great adventures of all time, but the world has need of knowing more about it than has heretofore been told, and Julia Davis has undertaken in this volume to tell more about it. From the diaries of the explorers and other sources she has constructed a closely knit and satisfying account of the journey which brings into high relief the valor of the leaders and the hardships they endured with their men.

A reader shares with Capt. Lewis the exaltation of the moment on a late May afternoon when he, walking alone ahead of the rest, climbed a ridge and saw for the first time the far white peaks of the Rockies, the Shining Mountains of Indian legend, lying across the distant horizon like a gleaming jagged wall.

There is a sharing, too, in the moment when Lewis came at last to the Great Falls of the Missouri —"sublimely grand and from the commencement of time concealed from the eye of civilized man. . . . Since chaos the river had poured over the cliffs waiting for one white man to come and tell the world that it was there."

It is not possible, however, to share the humility of the leader when, with his great task nearing completion, he wrote in his diary: "This day I completed my thirty-first year, and conceived that I had existed about half the period which I am to remain in this sublunary world. I reflected that I had done as yet but little, very little indeed, to further the happiness of the human race, or to advance the information of the succeeding generation. I viewed with regret the many hours I have spent in indolence . . . but since they are past and cannot be recalled, I dash from me the gloomy thought, and resolve in future to redouble my exertions—to live for mankind, as I have heretofore lived for myself."

Self-disparagement revealed the fine spirit of the man, but the "very little" that he and his companions had done greatly furthered the happiness of the human race and advanced the information of succeeding generations, as this new account abundantly shows.

Reviews Our Part In World War

OUR GALLANT MADNESS. By Frederick Palmer. (Doubleday, Doran & Co., Garden City, N. Y.)

MAJ. PALMER, in a closely packed and vivid record of America's participation in the World War, undertakes to give the world-picture and the American scene, not as research folk and second-guessers have since reconstructed them, but as mature and well-read Americans of the time saw and felt them to be. Chiefly, he says, "it was the train of events in provocation, the working of our own minds," that decided the nation's course.

The panorama of swiftly moving events in Europe and at home is displayed, Pershing's men speeding overseas and into the trench-lines, while in the heart of Woodrow Wilson, "the wrath of God burned not in leaping flames, but in white heat —he would keep on sending soldiers, a million, two million, to win a holy war."

"Again?" the author asks in the last chapter. "There is no more argument in favor of war than in favor of going to bed with a rattlesnake or a plague-infected rat," he says. But embargo legislation, unless drastically inclusive and heroically adhered to by Government and people, will not insure America against involvement. The greatest need is "that we also place an embargo on our human selves," our interests and sympathies. "We must not fall under the European spell. Europe still influences our ideology to a degree out of keeping with our adult national self-respect. It has become a habit with us to apply 'Fascist' and 'Communist' in relation to our home affairs."

Practical naval preparedness, for protection of shipping from submarine and aerial attack, is urged. "This is real defense, it is not provocation. It carries no implication of a war of conquest, and other nations know that it does not."

—C. F. Hurd.

THIS story of sixteenth century Italy, written primarily for young people in the late 'teens, proves to be excellent light reading for the adult. Carlo Brunelli, son of a musician of Florence, is entranced with the beauty he sees about him in sculpture, architecture, painting. His interest leads him to devote himself to the crafts of his day, and he becomes in time a typically versatile artist of the Renaissance.

Mr. Stratton makes use of his wide knowledge of Renaissance Rome and Florence to give the reader a picture of the plague and of the treachery, poisoning and fighting that were characteristic of the age. The result is a tale of adventure and excitement, not told so as to seem too improbable.

BONDS QUIET DESPITE ACTIVE NEW FINANCING

Week's Trading Winds Up With Slowest Closing Day in Almost Seven Years.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The most active capital market in several months was accompanied this week by quiet dealing in the bond market.

Trading fell today to the slowest gait for a Saturday in nearly seven years. Price changes were inconsequential. Volume dropped to $2,910,000, face value, the smallest figure for the short session since Aug. 2, 1930, when the aggregate for all bonds was $2,793,000.

New financing reached $149,000,000, face value, during the week. While many dealers were confident some clew to the trend of bond prices would come from these flotations, they found little upon which to formulate trading policies. Investors remained on the sidelines, despite the re-entry of insurance companies and banks to the money market.

Wall Street observers said interest lagged because of concern over the steel strike situation, worry over the French montetary crisis and uncertainty over the extent of the anticipated summer business recession.

Secondary and stock privilege bonds drew the week's heaviest offerings, although at no time was selling pronounced. These issues generally moved in conformity with stock prices. Railroad and utility loans lost the most ground, although setbacks seldom exceeded fractions.

Fairly wide reverses were dealt loans of New York Steam, Interborough Rapid Transit, Third Avenue Railway and St. Louis-Southwestern Railway.

Foreign bonds edged back and forth most of the week and closed even to a little lower. Dealing in this section was quiet.

Slight Gains and Losses for Federals in Yesterday's Session.

With the tape resting between sales, there was little chance of noteworthy changes in quotations today. United States Government issues wobbled through the session with gains ranging to 3-32 of a point and losses to ⅛. Such minute variations had little effect on the standing of these loans on the week and the list showed recessions from the preceding Saturday of 1-32 to 13-32 of a point.

Domestic corporate liens were even less inclined to budge, and all groups held to virtually unaltered positions. The Associated Press averages for all groups—except the 10 industrials which lowered .1 of a point to 102.7—finished the day all square with yesterday's levels.

A sprinkling of obligations swung major fractions. Alleghany stamped 5s added ¾ at 63, Great Western 4s were up ⅝ to ¾, Southern Pacific 4s lifted ⅝ to 105⅞ and Utah Power and Light 5s were a bit higher. Hudson & Manhattan income 5s lost ¾ to 24¼, Western Union 5s dropped ¾ to 99¼ and St. Paul's declined ½ to 24.

The steady climb of German loans continued today as the stamped 7s added 1 at 35¼, a new 1937 high. Other issues are at or near their peaks. Industrial issues of that country also went forward.

COTTON EASIER ON MORE FAVORABLE WEATHER REPORT

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—Following early steadiness, cotton turned easier today on more favorable weather developments and the labor news. October sold off from 12.14 to 12 and closed at 12.01, with final prices 8 to 12 points net lower.

The market opened 5 points higher to 1 point lower in part, in response to rallies at Liverpool. This influence was partly offset by week-end liquidation, but the volume of trading was small and principally of a local character during the first hour.

Later the market sagged 11 to 15 points from the early highs, under selling promoted by the forecast for mostly fair weather in the Western belt next week and steel strike reports.

The forecast for thundershowers in the Eastern and Central belts was regarded less favorably, especially in view of reports of increasing insect activity, but this failed to stimulate buying.

Cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 27,000 bales, against 36,000 last year and 71,000 two years ago.

U. S. COTTON EXPORT DECLINE IN WORLD TRADE EXPANSION

WASHINGTON, June 19.—The Agriculture Department reported today that United States exports of cotton have declined this season although world trade in cotton has expanded sharply.

A department survey shows 10,271,000 bales of cotton in international trade for the first nine months of this season compared with 8,159,000 bales in the same period last season and 9,831,000 bales two seasons ago.

United States exports for the nine months are given as 4,985,000 bales. This is 439,000 bales, or 8 per cent, under last season, and 2,106,000 bales, or 30 per cent, under the 10-year average from 1923-24 to 1932-33.

The period covered in the survey is from August through April.

The United States exports represent 48 per cent of the world trade as compared with a 10-year average of 37 per cent.

The survey shows Japan as chief outlet for American cotton, Japan taking 1,410,000 bales or 28 per cent of total exports. This is larger than recent seasons or the long-time average. British markets took 1,068,000 bales against 1,210,000 last season. Canada took 233,000 bales, a peak figure, and exports to France, Sweden and the Netherlands were larger than last season. Exports to all other principal importing countries were smaller.

THE white men who went, 133 years ago, where no white men had gone before, were Meriwether Lewis, William Clark and the members of their expedition. It was, as the world well knows, one of the great adventures of all time, but the world has need of knowing more about it than has heretofore been told, and Julia Davis has undertaken in this volume to tell more about it. From the diaries of the explorers and other sources she has constructed a closely knit and satisfying account of the journey which brings into high relief the valor of the leaders and the hardships they endured with their men.

A reader shares with Capt. Lewis the exaltation of the moment on a late May afternoon when he, walking alone ahead of the rest, climbed a ridge and saw for the first time the far white peaks of the Rockies, the Shining Mountains of Indian legend, lying across the distant horizon like a gleaming jagged wall.

There is a sharing, too, in the moment when Lewis came at last to the Great Falls of the Missouri—"sublimely grand and from the commencement of time concealed from the eye of civilized man. . . . Since chaos the river had poured over the cliffs waiting for one white man to come and tell the world that it was there."

It is not possible, however, to share the humility of the leader when, with his great task nearing completion, he wrote in his diary: "This day I completed my thirty-first year, and conceived that I had existed about half the period which I am to remain in this sublunary world. I reflected that I had done as yet but little, very little indeed, to further the happiness of the human race, or to advance the information of the succeeding generation. I viewed with regret the many hours I have spent in indolence . . . but since they are past and cannot be recalled, I dash from me the gloomy thought, and resolve in future to redouble my exertions—to live for mankind, as I have heretofore lived for myself."

Self-disparagement revealed the fine spirit of the man, but the "very little" that he and his companions had done greatly furthered the happiness of the human race and advanced the information of succeeding generations, as this new account abundantly shows.

Reviews Our Part In World War

MAJ. PALMER, in a closely packed and vivid record of America's participation in the World War, undertakes to give the world-picture and the American scene, not as research folk and second-guessers have since reconstructed them, but as mature and well-read Americans of the time saw and felt them to be. Chiefly, he says, "it was the train of events in provocation, the working of our own minds," that decided the nation's course.

The panorama of swiftly moving events in Europe and at home is displayed, Pershing's men speeding overseas and into the trench-lines, while in the heart of Woodrow Wilson, "the wrath of God burned not in leaping flames, but in white heat—he would keep on sending soldiers, a million, two million, to win a holy war."

"Again?" the author asks in the last chapter. "There is no more argument in favor of war than in favor of going to bed with a rattlesnake or a plague-infected rat," he says. But embargo legislation, unless drastically inclusive and heroically adhered to by Government and people, will not insure America against involvement. The greatest need is "that we also place an embargo on our human selves," our interests and sympathies. "We must not fall under the European spell. Europe still influences our ideology to a degree out of keeping with our adult national self-respect. It has become a habit with us to apply 'Fascist' and 'Communist' in relation to our home affairs."

Practical naval preparedness, for protection of shipping from submarine and aerial attack, is urged. "This is real defense, it is not provocation. It carries no implication of a war of conquest, and other nations know that it does not."

—C. F. Hurd.

THIS story of sixteenth century Italy, written primarily for young people in the late 'teens, proves to be excellent light reading for the adult. Carlo Brunelli, son of a musician of Florence, is entranced with the beauty he sees about him in sculpture, architecture, painting. His interest leads him to devote himself to the crafts of his day, and he becomes in time a typically versatile artist of the Renaissance.

Mr. Stratton makes use of his wide knowledge of Renaissance Rome and Florence to give the reader a picture of the plague and of the treachery, poisoning and fighting that were characteristic of the age. The result is a tale of adventure and excitement, not told so as to seem too improbable.

BONDS QUIET DESPITE ACTIVE NEW FINANCING

Week's Trading Winds Up With Slowest Closing Day in Almost Seven Years.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The most active capital market in several months was accompanied this week by quiet dealing in the bond market.

Trading fell today to the slowest gait for a Saturday in nearly seven years. Price changes were inconsequential. Volume dropped to $2,910,000, face value, the smallest figure for the short session since Aug. 2, 1930, when the aggregate for all bonds was $2,793,000.

New financing reached $149,000,000, face value, during the week. While many dealers were confident some clew to the trend of bond prices would come from these flotations, they found little upon which to formulate trading policies. Investors remained on the sidelines, despite the re-entry of insurance companies and banks to the money market.

Wall Street observers said interest lagged because of concern over the steel strike situation, worry over the French monetary crisis and uncertainty over the extent of the anticipated summer business recession.

Secondary and stock privilege bonds drew the week's heaviest offerings, although at no time was selling pronounced. These issues generally moved in conformity with stock prices. Railroad and utility loans lost the most ground, although setbacks seldom exceeded fractions.

Fairly wide reverses were dealt loans of New York Steam, Interborough Rapid Transit, Third Avenue Railway and St. Louis-Southwestern Railway.

Foreign bonds edged back and forth most of the week and closed even to a little lower. Dealing in this section was quiet.

Slight Gains and Losses for Federals in Yesterday's Session.

With the tape resting between sales, there was little chance of noteworthy changes in quotations today. United States Government issues wobbled through the session with gains ranging to 3-32 of a point and losses to ⅛. Such minute variations had little effect on the standing of these loans on the week and the list showed recessions from the preceding Saturday of 1-32 to 13-32 of a point.

Domestic corporate liens were even less inclined to budge, and all groups held to virtually unaltered positions. The Associated Press averages for all groups—except the 10 industrials which lowered .1 of a point to 102.7—finished the day all square with yesterday's levels.

A sprinkling of obligations swung major fractions. Alleghany stamped 5s added ¾ at 63, Great Western 4s were up ⅝ to ¾, Southern Pacific 4s lifted ⅝ to 105⅞ and Utah Power and Light 5s were a bit higher. Hudson & Manhattan income 5s lost ¾ to 24¼, Western Union 5s dropped ¾ to 99¼ and St. Paul's declined ½ to 24.

The steady climb of German loans continued today as the stamped 7s added 1 at 35¼, a new 1937 high. Other issues are at or near their peaks. Industrial issues of that country also went forward.

CURB MOVES FORWARD IN UNUSUALLY QUIET DAY

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—In one of the quietest days since March, 1935, the curb market moved generally forward in spite of a bad case of summer Saturday doldrums.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass recouped some of its losses of earlier in the week, running up two points to close at 123. Sherwin-Williams also scored a gain, finishing at 121.

The oil division was mixed, with Creole Petroleum up a point and Gulf Oil pointing down ½.

Utilities showed steadiness, with swings confined to narrow margins. Electric Bond & Share gained ¼, closing at 15. Slightly improved were United Wall Paper, Pan-American Airways and Tubize Chatillon.

Illinois Zinc was a loser by a point, and Axton Fisher A dropped 2 to close at 29. Fractionally lower were Pittsburgh Metal, Technicolor, American Airlines and American Cynamid B.

Transfers for the short session totaled 62,000 shares, compared with Friday's volume of 105,000 shares.

Slow Week in Stock Market; Steadiness of Trend Lacking; Strikes Make Traders Cautious

Nervous, Uneven Efforts Toward Recovery Followed by Setbacks—Tape Drags at the End.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The stock market made mild, uneven efforts toward recovery this week but traders were nervous and steadiness of trend was lacking, due to the course of the strike in independent steel sectors.

As the week got under way, prices yielded under weight of sales attributed to bitterness of the conflict, the break being the widest in a month and the volume the heaviest for about the same period. Later, prices steadied and, on Thursday, a rally followed news of appointment of a Federal mediation board to act on steel labor troubles. Finally, today's strike developments chilled the list and trading was so listless the tape dragged.

Trade and other industrial news during the week made good reading. The rise in retail sales took on strength. Higher statistics were posted for steel operations, carloadings and electric power output. Motor production dipped, however, owing to strikes.

Apparent unwillingness of shares to respond more impressively to the tidings of trade vitality, observers said, indicated continued fear of labor troubles.

Sales during the week amounted to 5,107,442 shares, compared with 3,483,701 a week ago and 5,146,616 a year ago. Total sales from Jan. 1 to date were 223,980,742 shares, compared with 253,370,815 a year ago and 119,867,407 two years ago.

Slowest Saturday Trading in Two and a Half Years.

Stocks moved unevenly within a narrow range and got nowhere today in the slowest Saturday trading in two and a half years.

Among the 20 most active shares, the widest price change was ⅞ of a point.

Keepers of the records went back to Oct. 27, 1934, to find a day in which transactions were fewer than the 220,950 shares traded today. At the finish the Associated Press average of 60 stocks was down .2 of a point to 64.4.

Rails and coppers were mostly a little lower. Utilities perked up for a while, but interest died and they finished about unchanged. Steels, motors and oils were mixed.

Traders were obviously waiting for a break in the steel strike situation. Bethlehem gained ¼ at 81⅜. But only 1800 shares changed hands.

Some bargain hunters were on hand at the opening and their bids carried a part of the list higher. But activity sagged and whole minutes went by without a flicker of the ticker tape.

Lethargy of the carriers was attributed partly to loss of traffic through the steel strike, and to uncertainty over wage negotiations.

Greatest activity appeared in the oils, but they sold very closely in line with yesterday's closing level.

Up a Little, Down a Little.

Shares moving up a little included Consolidated Edison at 33⅝, Public Service of New Jersey, 37⅝; Columbia Gas, 11⅜; North American, 23½; American Can, 94½; Briggs Manufacturing, 41¾, and General Foods, 37¼.

Also fractionally on the plus side were American Tobacco, 78; Nash-Kelvinator, 17½; Studebaker, 13; Deere, 128¼, and Murray Corporation, 11⅛.

U. S. Steel dropped ⅝ at 95⅜. Bonds, inactive as the stock division, moved in a narrow groove. With U. S. Governments mixed and corporates virtually unchanged. Wheat at Chicago dipped 1⅝ to 2⅜ cents a bushel and corn was off 1⅛ to 1¾ cents. Cotton slipped 40 to 60 cents a bale. Foreign exchange dealings were at a minimum. Both the French franc and pound sterling closed unchanged from yesterday's final rate.

COMMODITIES AT NEW LOW FOR THIS YEAR

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—Commodity prices dipped to a new low for the year this week, yielding to steady pressure of impending increases in supplies of most staples.

The entire complexion of the commodity picture has changed in recent months. From November, 1936, to April, this year, quotations charged ahead to one new peak after another. In the past two and a half months, however, until the slid without interruption, until the last of this year's gains have finally disappeared.

The Associated Press weighted index of 35 important wholesale commodity prices dropped to 89.01 per cent of the 1926 average from 89.57 last week and compared with 73.01 a year ago.

Both agricultural and textile staples established new 1937 lows during the week. Corn, rye and cotton fell back on reports from growing areas that recent rains had added materially to probable harvests. Wheat moved up slightly on prospects of a short Canadian crop and rust in the United States spring wheat territory, but slipped today.

Demand for textile products ebbed further as consumers waited for growing mill inventories to force greater price cuts. Cotton cloth and silk both gave ground. Cotton manufacturing activity, however, gave no evidence of the distribution tangle, holding close to the highest point on record.

Livestock prices, under the leadership of lamb, backed away from the recovery top set a month ago. Cattle retreated, while hogs advanced.

Food alone, among the major groups, chalked up a gain over the previous period. This was the result, primarily, of the 45 cent per barrel jump in flour, a 6.7 per cent upturn in seven days. Eggs and sugar also pushed ahead to more than offset declines in cocoa, coffee and lard.

Industrial staples continued to drift downward. Bituminous coal, steel scrap, turpentine, linseed oil, burlap and tin concurring. Rubber stood out against the majority, rising sharply on conflicting reports of consumption.

COPPER MARKET UNCHANGED, LEAD QUIET AND ZINC STEADY

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—While the copper market remained unchanged last week, domestic producers were reported confident of early resumption of demand for replenishing stocks.

Export prices fluctuated within a 60-point range and, after selling off to nearly 13 cents, recovered, to end the period at about 13.65 cents, c. i. f. usual European base ports.

Some export interests felt reopening of long-idle mines, principally in South Africa, tended to have a depressing effect.

Tin moved off 1 cent early in the week as supplies increased and demand tapered on adverse labor developments. Near the close of the week the price recovered ½ cent on better consumer interest arising from labor mediation efforts.

Lead was quiet and unchanged, with consumers reported nearly half covered on July requirements and in no hurry to supply more distant needs.

Zinc was steady, with buyers filling in only routine requirements and prompt shipments were readily available. For distant delivery, there was reported a more active inquiry by domestic consumers for lower-range foreign zinc.

Antimony was quiet, with only moderate new demand. The price was steady.

In the steel market as a whole, the strikes are having comparatively little new influence, with production of steel ingots only 1 point lower for the week at 78 per cent.

FOREIGN MARKETS AT A GLANCE

LIVERPOOL, June 19.—Wheat futures moved irregularly today, closing ¼d lower to ⅜d higher. France resold Danubian wheat to the United Kingdom and weather reports from the United States were favorable. There was some covering of distant options at the close.

Cotton futures closed 5 to 6 points higher as nervous shorts covered, and there was scattered foreign buying induced by reports of weevil complaints in the United States.

London and Paris—Closed.

New York Bank Statement.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The weekly statement of the New York Clearing House shows: Total surplus and undivided profits unchanged at $884,780,100; total net demand deposits (average), increased $78,839,000; time deposits (average), increased $2,480,000; clearings week ending today, $4,296,971,160; clearings week ending June 12, $3,373,045,177.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The statistical picture of industry was unchanged this week as gains in a few groups were offset by declines elsewhere.

The seasonally adjusted Associated Press index, at 104.5 per cent of the 1929-30 average, equaled the previous week and was substantially above the 90.0 of a year ago.

The downturn evident during the past month was stemmed by a slight recovery in steel operations and a jump in electric power production to the highest point on record on a seasonal basis.

Automobile production lines slowed as a strike cut output of General Motors. Ford assemblies were reported unchanged and a minor gain was indicated for Chrysler.

The index, with its seasonally adjusted components based on the latest available statistics and with 1929-30 as 100, compared as follows:

CONTROL BOARD KEEPS FRANC FAIRLY STEADY

Other Units in Foreign Exchange Dealings Quiet—Gold Engagements.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The French franc continued to play a major role in the week's foreign exchange markets. Official control board action managed to keep the franc fairly steady against the dollar, but the discount on the futures appreciably widened.

Following Premier Blum's request for decree powers and the Minister of Finance's intimation that France would not leave the tri-partite agreement, the franc fluttered indecisively. The discount on futures narrowed as the week drew to a close, however, indicating that possibly the crisis had passed.

Other units in foreign exchange dealings were quiet and remained fairly steady. Dehoarded gold still continued to move to this country in heavy volume, although somewhat under the preceding week.

Gold engagements totaled $38,060,000 compared with $40,913,000 compared with $40,913,000 in the preceding week.

Closing Rates of Week.

Foreign exchange dealings marked time today in an extremely quiet market. With Paris foreign exchange markets closed, the franc here was unchanged against the dollar at 4.45½ cents. Discount on futures widened a little, being quoted 18¼ to 19 of a cent below spot prices.

The pound sterling and the Holland guilder were unchanged against the dollar. The recent Bank of Netherlands announcement that the embargo on gold had been lifted seemed to have little effect on an apathetic market.

London cables reported the dollar lost 5-32 in quiet trading, closing at 4.93 29-32 to the pound compared with New York's overnight sterling rate of $4.94. French francs ended 110.91 to the pound against 110.87 on the previous day.

Gold engagements totaled $2,549,000 in England and $2,509,000 in Canada for shipment to New York.

WHEAT SLUMPS ON HARVEST AND WEATHER NEWS

Week's End at Chicago Finds Prices 1 5-8 to 2 3-8 Cents Under Previous Day's Close.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 19.—Greatly improved domestic harvest conditions Southwest shoved wheat values downward 2½ cents a bushel maximum today.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were 1⅝@2⅜ cents under yesterday's finish, July $1.07@1.07⅛, September $1.06⅜-½, December $1.08½-⅝; corn 1⅛@1¾ down, July $1.12¾-⅞, September $1.00½-⅝, December 74⅜-½c; oats ½@⅞ off, September 39¼, and rye showing 1⅛@1⅜ drop, September 75½c. Provisions results were unchanged to 12 cents lower. They lacked progressive buying support.

Corn, oats and rye follow the action of wheat. Corn price setbacks were in the face of a good deal of unwelcome moisture, whereas, the new domestic corn crop now requires dry and warmer weather.

Enlarged Movement Likely.

With ideal harvest weather prevailing, indications pointed to a much enlarged movement of newly harvested winter wheat away from farms, and it was expected the increased receipts would result in decidedly heavier offering of shipments to Europe via the Gulf of Mexico, causing augmented selling pressure abroad. Arrivals of winter wheat at nine Southwestern centers today totaled 926 cars, about three times as many as a year ago.

Furthermore, the Dakotas and Minnesota and Montana were reported to have received copious showers, likely to prove benefical to spring wheat crops, and there also were forecasts that considerable moisture would be received by Canadian wheat provinces Monday, as well as during the remainder of next week.

Yields Better Than Expected.

Advices are that domestic harvest yields at numerous places Southwest, Oklahoma in particular, are turning out 5 to 7 bushels better than expected. The Kansas Millers' Association has estimated the 1937 Kansas wheat crop at 140,000,000 to 150,000,000 bushels, against 120,000,000 bushels harvested last year, barring black rust damage.

Unofficial estimates current place Italy's 1937 wheat crop at 50,000,000 bushels above that of last year. France is reported as re-selling Danubian wheat to British millers, and as figuring that there will be no need of wheat imports by France the coming season, except wheat from North Africa. An additional bearish factor is talk that within a week or two when threshing returns are received from Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa and Missouri, the showing will be better than heretofore looked for.

Wheat futures purchases yesterday totaled 11,882,000 bushels, corn 13,446,000 bushels. Open interest in wheat was 87,385,000 bushels, and in corn 35,473,000.

ST. LOUIS MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, June 19.—Wheat futures were lower today. July closed at $1.06, off 1⅝c, and September at $1.06⅛, down 2⅜c.

Winnipeg wheat opened ½@⅞c lower, and early was 1½@1⅝c off. The close was 1⅞@2⅛c lower.

Liverpool wheat started ⅜@½d higher and closed ¼d lower to ⅜d higher.

Argentine wheat and corn opened unchanged.

Local wheat receipts, which were 16,500 bushels, compared with 15,000 a week ago and 19,500 a year ago, included 11 cars local. Corn receipts, which were 33,000 bushels, compared with 33,000 a week ago and 75,000 a year ago, included 22 cars local and 8 through. Oats receipts, which were 8000 bushels, compared with 16,000 a week ago and 10,000 a year ago, included 4 cars local.

St. Louis Cash Grain.

In the cash grain market Saturday there were no offerings of red winter wheat, but some hard wheat, the first of the new crop on the local board, sold on contract to a local mill. The grain was shipped from Oklahoma and consisted of one car No. 1 dark hard, 60-pound, 11.1 per cent moisture, protein 16.40 per cent; one car No. 2 dark hard, 59.4-pound, 11.7 per cent moisture; one car No. 2 hard, 58.8-pound, 11.1 per cent moisture. Corn was unchanged. Supply was somewhat better and the demand was good, but with buyers and sellers apart in price views, some grain was carried over. Mills, elevators and feeders showed the interest. Oats were 1c higher. Supply was light. Inquiry was good. A mill got the only car changing hands.

BARRIE FUNERAL AT HIS NATIVE SCOTTISH VILLAGE

Services to Be Held Thursday in Kirriemuir for Noted Novelist and Playwright, Dead at 77.

MEMORIAL ALSO PLANNED IN LONDON

Writer Passes Peacefully—Peter Davies, Who Inspired Story of Peter Pan, at the Bedside.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, June 19.—Sir James M. Barrie, noted novelist and playwright, died in a London nursing home today.

Peter Davies, adopted son of the 77-year-old author, watched death come peacefully after a long illness which developed into bronchial pneumonia. It was Davies who inspired Barrie's story of Peter Pan, the little boy who wouldn't grow up.

Funeral services will be held Thursday at Kirriemuir, Scottish village where Barrie was born and which he made famous as the setting for "A Window in Thrums." A memorial service in London was planned.

Barrie's earliest works, such as "My Lady Nicotine," gained him immediate recognition. His fame increased with "The Little Minister," "The Admirable Crichton" and "A Kiss for Cinderella." Last year, after 10 years of inactivity, he wrote "The Boy David," which scored a hit in Scotland and England.

Death brought an immediate rush of tributes.

George Bernard Shaw added a brusque comment. "Barrie had a good, long life," Shaw said. "He said everything he wanted to say and now he's dead. I suppose I'll be dead shortly. He and I were always good friends, but I don't feel sentimental about his death."

J. Ramsay MacDonald, former Prime Minister, declared that "as long as there is a Scottish mind left in the world Barrie will remain a memory that will be associated with the very best qualities in Scottish literature."

Mrs. Stanley, the housekeper who looked after Barrie's wants for 20 years in his flat overlooking the Thames, was too overcome by grief to speak of his death.

Barrie a Success As a Writer Almost from Beginning.

UNLIKE many writers who have had to struggle for recognition, Sir James M. Barrie achieved success in literature and drama almost from the start.

Born in Kirriemuir, Scotland, May 9, 1860, he was educated at Dumfries Academy and Edinburgh University. His early training as a writer was as a newspaper man in Nottingham, and later in London, where he wrote for the St. James Gazette, the British Weekly, the Speaker and the National Observer.

His first book, "Better Dead," a satire on London life, was published in 1887, and the next year he produced "Auld Licht Idylls" and "When a Man's Single." While these books attracted some attention, his genius was first recognized and acknowledged with the appearance of "A Window in Thrums" in 1889. There followed "My Lady Nicotine," and the best known of his early works, "The Little Minister," which, when dramatized by Barrie, became one of the leading stage successes and later had several revivals.

After the stage success of "The Little Minister," Barrie produced many other notable plays, including "Quality Street," "The Admirable Crichton," "Peter Pan," "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire," and "What Every Woman Knows."

Marital Troubles.

The last named was produced in 1908 and was followed by the greatest disappointment in his life—his marital troubles, culminating in divorce in October, 1909. He married, in 1895, Miss Mary Ansell, who had scored a success in his comedy "Walker, London," two years before. The divorce proceeding came as a great surprise to friends of both, as they had appeared to be a most devoted pair. Barrie had offered to forgive his wife and take her back, but she refused and the divorce proceedings and trial followed.

Barrie's best known dramatic works of later years included: "The Legend of Leonora," "The Will," "The Adored One," "Half an Hour," "Der Tag," "Rosy Rapture," "A Kiss for Cinderella," "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals," "Seven Women," "Dear Brutus," "Echoes of the War," "The Truth About the Russian Dancers," "Mary Rose."

Many of his stage successes were produced in the United States by Charles Frohman, who was one of his closest friends. During Frohman's visits to London the two were inseparable. Maude Adams starred in three of Barrie's plays in this country, "The Little Minister," "Peter Pan" and "What Every Woman Knows."

A baronetcy was conferred on Barrie on June 3, 1913, on the occasion of the birthday anniversary of King George V, and the Order of Merit was conferred on him for his service to literature and the drama in 1922.

Al Smith Discovers Many Reforms in Government in Italy Are Copied From United States

Story of Mussolini's Rise — Milan and the Cathedral—A Visit to Old Walled French City of Carcassonne.

By ALFRED E. SMITH.
(Copyright, 1937.)

PARIS, June 19.

I FEEL that I did not give a sufficient description of one of the most important men in Europe, the Premier of Italy, in my last article. He comes of an old Italian family that was prominent in the City of Bologna in the thirteenth century. His father was a blacksmith. In our country we would say that Mussolini came up from the rank and file.

He had a most interesting early career. He was banished from Italy at one time because of his Socialistic ideas and teachings. Thereafter he went to France and was engaged as a schoolteacher and a writer for newspapers. His early life was marked by his extreme devotion to his mother. In the writing of his autobiography he refers to her death as the first sad moment in his life.

Dissatisfied with schoolteaching, he went to Switzerland, where he worked as a laborer in the construction of buildings. But he found it impossible to remain there, as he had a yearning for home and for the Italian people. Upon the death of his father, he settled in Milan as the head of a newspaper called Avante.

Service in War.

At the outbreak of the war he was called to the colors of his country and served as a sergeant in the Italian army during the period of the war. At its close Italy was much disturbed, and because of conditions then confronting Italy Mussolini formed what is known today as the Fascist party. Through that party be became Premier and ruler of Italy. When I say through that party, it would be necessary for you to make a close study of its operation to understand just how much it has to do with the Government of Italy itself. It is the sole political party and is the agency for many works of charity as well as regulation of personal conduct. By that I mean that the members of the party are taxed to care for the poor, the sick, and the needy unemployed.

Regulating Private Affairs.

The dues of the party run from a $1.50 a year upwards, in accordance with the ability of the member to pay. The party is also used to regulate personal conduct in the interest of the good order and well-being of Italy. For instance, it is by means of the Fascist party that the Premier suggests that all Italians leave night clubs and public places before midnight. Men in a position to know say that not the smallest part of the work of Mussolini has been to inspire the Italian people with a new confidence in themselves and a desire to put forth a greater pride in Italy.

It is true, of course, that a great many of the measures affecting Italian life would be said to be Socialistic, but it must also be said that many of the forward-looking reforms in government have been copied in our own State of New York and many other states of our Union. For instance, there was in effect in Italy a system of workmen's compensation insurance for injury in industrial accidents as far back as 1884, while we enacted a similar statute in 1913. There are all forms of insurance compulsory by law.

Care of the Tubercular.

By the operation of health insurance the Government is able to control the care and treatment of people suffering from tuberculosis. Adults are compelled to go to a sanatorium. If one of a family of children develops tuberculosis the rest of the children are taken to a country place. The only tubercular patient permitted to remain at home is the mother. Every year upward of 700,000 children are given a vacation either at the mountains or the seashore at the expense of the Government and the place of vacation is determined for each child by medical examination.

Wages are fixed all over Italy on the basis of a fair return to both capital and labor. There are no arbitrary statutes fixing either wages or hours, but they are regulated by organizations on which both labor and capital are represented. Of course it must be borne in mind that this type of government is costly.

Heavy Taxation.

Taxes in relation to salary received in what we refer to as the low brackets are greater than those exacted in the United States. For example, $720 a year is regarded as a high salary for a stenographer, and out of that a stenographer must pay $10 a year income tax, which is deducted from her pay by her employer and remitted to the Government in four instalments. I spent quite a bit of time talking to a prominent Italian whose father-in-law is a doctor, and he told me that on a $5000 income he paid $600 in taxes.

There is, however, one thing about taxation in Italy, insofar as real estate is concerned, that leads me to believe that they are just a little bit ahead of our way of taxing real estate. The owners of vacant lots pay 20 per cent of the value of the lot, which value is fixed by assessors. The same method is used for the taxation of improved property insofar as the land is concerned, but the building thereon is taxed on the basis of its earnings.

Marvels at Milan Cathedral.

When the time came to leave Italy I brought with me only the most pleasant recollections of everything that happened from the time I came of the boat at Naples until I left by auto from the city of Milan. Incidentally, Milan comes nearer to resembling an American city than any other I saw during my trip through Italy, and it is no wonder to me that the great cathedral is listed as one of the wonders of the world. I will make no attempt to describe it. It would be necessary for you to see it. It is one of the largest churches in the world. If placed on Fifth Avenue it would require in length a little less than three blocks and would be a block and a half in width. The exterior is adorned with about 2800 statues, all in marble. Its construction began in 1386, but was not entirely completed until 1825.

Leaving Milan, we drove along the Italian Riviera, and, to my way of thinking, there is probably no sight that I ever saw that was more beautiful. It seemed to me that flowers were growing out of the rocks. We then came to the world famous Monte Carlo. We arrived there at the close of the season, and only a few people were around. I tried very hard to find the man who broke the bank, but he was missing.

We went from there to the small city of Avignon, all through interesting countryside, and it seemed to me that the southern part of France equals the beauty of Italy, so far as antiquity is concerned. Avignon is a real old village with very narrow streets.

Ancient Carcassonne.

Then we came to probably the most uniquely interesting place on the entire trip, Carcassonne. The hotel where we stopped was formerly the residence of the bishop and is alongside of the cathedral. The old city is entirely within the ancient walls and I was naturally impressed with the care that was afforded by these walls in the protection of the inhabitants from invasion. I have been in many churches in my time, but I never saw more beautiful stained glass windows in any church than will be found in the church of Saint Nazaire at Carcassonne. I suggest to my readers that they look up the history of the city and my observation is that it hasn't changed in appearance since the early days of Philip the Bold.

From Carcassonne we went to the winter resort of Pau and landed there at the end of the season. Part of the hotel was closed.

A Visit to Lourdes.

Before reaching Pau, however, we stopped off at Lourdes and there beheld an inspiring sight. We arrived just in time for the afternoon benediction outdoors. Lined on both sides of the great plaza were the sick and the afflicted in wheel chairs of all kinds and descriptions, seeking the healing waters of the spring of Our Lady of Lourdes. It was probably one of the most impressive sights that I have ever seen. So much did it affect me that I went back to Lourdes the next morning and remained there until half past six in the evening. During that time I saw the pilgrims being bathed and again the procession of the Blessed Sacrament and benediction. It was fortunate for us that the pilgrimage was from London and we were able to understand just what they were talking about.

The grotto itself is an imposing sight. Crutches, shoes made for deformed feet, braces to help physical deformities, are left at the grotto as evidence of the miracle of cure effected by the devotion of their owners. You will get some idea of this by reading the story of Saint Bernadette. Let it be sufficient for me to say that it is a sight that will remain with anybody for the rest of their lives.

Leaving Pau on Saturday night, we started for Paris. My next article will contain my impressions of one of the leading capitals of the world.

2500 IN PROGRAM PRECEDING TUBERCULOSIS DAY GAME

Helen Stephens, Olympic Champion, and Walking Race Among Features Tuesday.

More than 2500 performers will take part in a two-hour program preceding the twenty-third annual Tuberculosis day ball game Tuesday afternoon between the Cardinals and the Brooklyn Dodgers. Helen Stephens, Olympic champion, will run in a 100-yard handicap race, her second Tuberculosis day performance, and the National Amateur Athletic Union will hold its senior championship walking race.

About 1800 musicians in 20 drum and bugle corps and seven bands will close the pre-game program with a grand march. The program will open with a pageant by 350 girls from the municipal playgrounds. They will be followed by tumblers from the Southwest Gymnastic Society.

Souvenir programs will be sold by 160 young society women, chaperoned by 20 St. Louis matrons. The Tuberculosis and Health Society, which receives the proceeds of the game to finance its tuberculosis control program, last year received $20,000 from the game.

CITY PLAYGROUNDS TO OPEN TOMORROW

70 Recreation Centers Will Be Operated During 11-Week Season.

Seventy public school playgrounds will be opened tomorrow for an 11-week season in the school vacation period. Large attendance is expected. It will be the fifteenth annual season.

These recreational areas will be in service daily, except Saturday and Sunday. For many of the white playgrounds the hours will be 8:30 a. m. to 8:30 p. m., and for a majority of the Negro centers 8:30 a. m. to 5 p. m. Hours will vary elsewhere.

Playgrounds have been provided at 51 white and 13 Negro grade schools and six white high schools. The high school fields will be for children more than 16 years old.

A staff of more than 300 young men and women trained for the work will supervise the playgrounds under the direction of Alfred O. Anderson, director of physical education and recreation for the board. There will be men and women district supervisors as well as workers at each center.

The program will provide activities for children of varying ages, and will include handicraft, industrial play, dancing and inter-playground athletic competitions for boys and girls.

Final assignments were made and directions issued to the staff at a meeting with Anderson yesterday.

In charge of various divisions will be the following: Girls' handicraft, Miss Viola G. Holland, assisted by Miss Hallie Wharton and Miss Mary A. Hynes; boys' handicraft, Arthur Kreyling, assisted by Russell Hibbert and William O. Predock; boys' sports, Otto Rust; girls' games, Miss Marion L. Bernard; dancing, Miss Charlotte Lewis, with a group of assistants; district supervisors, Joseph H[illegible]laden, David Monahan, Burns M. Franklin, Louis Kittlaus Jr., Miss Gertrude Messina, Miss Dorothy Gorsuch, Miss Genevieve Schmitt and Miss Marie Meyer; personnel, Charles Naylor; Negro centers, William H. J. Beckett.

The following playgrounds will be open:

White grade schools—Arlington, Ashland, Baden, Buder, Carondelet, Carr, Clay, Clinton, Columbia, Cote Brilliante, Dewey, Dozier, Eliot, Emerson, Fanning, Farragut, Field, Fremont, Froebel, Gardenville, Gratiot, Gundlach, Hamilton, Hempstead, Herzog, Hodgen, Howard, Laclede, Lindenwood, Long, Longfellow, Mark Twain, Marquette, Mason, Mullanphy, Oak Hill, O'Fallon, Pestalozzi, Rock Springs, Scruggs, Scullin, Shaw, Shepard, Stix, Walbridge, Washington, Walnut Park, Webster, Woerner, Woodward, Wyman.

High Schools—Beaumont, Blewett, Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt, Central.

TERMINAL ASSN. MOVES TO DISMISS OUSTER SUIT

Belleville Circuit Court Told Title to East St. Louis Riverfront Has Been Upheld.

A motion seeking dismissal of the quo warranto suit to oust the Terminal Railroad Association from the St. Clair County riverfront was filed in Circuit Court at Belleville yesterday by the Terminal and its subsidiaries, the Wiggins Ferry Co. and the East St. Louis Connecting Railroad.

The motion says the Illinois Supreme Court has held that title to the riverfront, from Front street, East St. Louis, to the middle of the river, was held by the Terminal company. In the ouster suit, State's Attorney Louis P. Zerweck alleges the Terminal has usurped land for its tracks and has prevented public access to the river.

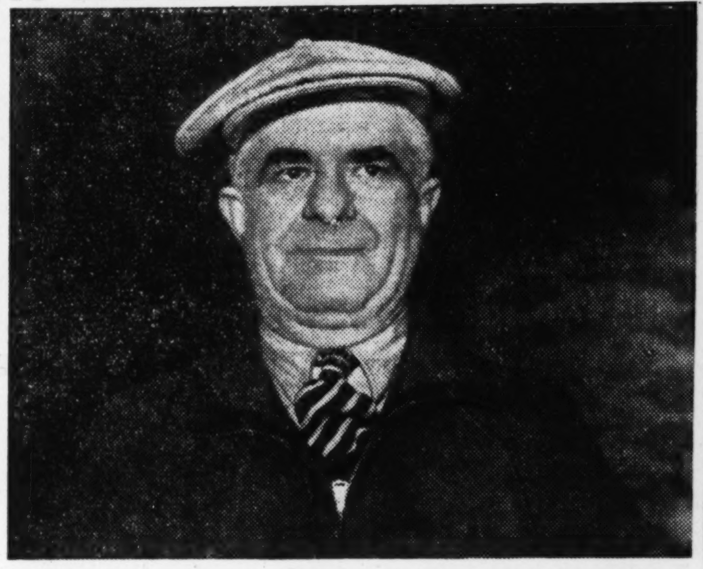
A SMART USED TRUCK BUYER



● "With business improving, our one truck wasn't enough," says Frank Haines, vegetable market owner. "But I hesitated about putting a lot of money in a new one. Then I figured that if I could pick up a good, sound used truck at a bargain price, I'd have the answer to my problem. So I got busy and checked up on the used truck market. I compared prices and models and in the end selected a Dodge dealer's Blue Seal truck—a commercial panel in first-class shape, both for looks and mechanically.

"And despite the fact that it was priced around $40 under what others were asking, it was in better condition and was sold under the Blue Seal plan that meant it was triple-checked for appearance, condition and price. Any buyer who wants the most for his money in a used truck—or used car for that matter—should make it a point to go to a Dodge dealer. You can't beat Dodge dealers' merchandise for value and dependability."

WOMEN'S APPAREL STORE LEASES 7TH & LOCUST

LOEW'S INC., RENEWS OLIVE STREET LEASE

Building With Large Frontage at 3010 Occupied for Office, Shipping and Inspection Purposes.

By Berry Moore.

Three Sisters, a women's apparel concern, operated by important retail interests, with headquarters in New York, was disclosed yesterday as the lessee of the ground floor and the second and third floors of the seven-story Dolph Building at the northeast corner of Seventh and Locust streets, for which negotiations were concluded two months ago, as was told in the Post-Dispatch. The building, including the site, is controlled by the May Department Stores Co. under a 99-year lease, from the Dolph estate, of which the Mercantile-Commerce Bank & Trust Co. is trustee.

Rental provisions of the new lease, which is for a 10-year term, were not disclosed. Negotiations in this connection were conducted by Arthur S. Martin & Son.

The building has a frontage on Locust street of 65 feet and on Seventh of 115 feet. There is a private east and west alley available in connection with the premises. The corner part of the ground floor formerly was occupied by a Walgreen drug store, under a lease which expired June 1. The Gradwohl Jewelry Co., which occupied quarters at 621 Locust street, in the Dolph Building, has taken the store room at 619 Locust street under a lease negotiated by Arthur S. Martin & Son.

Makes Large Allotment.

A large allotment has been made for remodeling and altering the quarters, which will be equipped and appointed on pretentious scale. Both the Locust and Seventh street fronts will be given a veneer treatment of stone. An air-conditioning system also is to be installed.

The new apparel store, which is scheduled to be opened about Sept. 1, will carry a comprehensive line of women's suits, coats, dresses, millinery, furs and shoes. Accordingly, its advent is expected to enhance the prestige of Locust street as a retail mart, constituting as it will virtually an injection of new blood into this downtown retail artery.

The Famous-Barr department store, which is operated by the May company, conducts a cafeteria in the basement of the Dolph Building, connected through a tunnel under Locust street with the Famous-Barr store, embracing the entire block bounded by Locust, Olive, Sixth and Seventh streets. The cafeteria also will be available in connection with the Three Sisters store.

Unit of Extensive Structure.

The Dolph Building virtually is an integral part of an extensive seven-story structure, occupying the west half of the Locust street side of this block, held under 99-year leases, or in fee, by the May Department Stores Co. The May company acquired complete control of this part of the block in June, 1935, when it purchased the fee to the seven-story building, 22 by 115 feet ⅝ inch, at 615 Locust street, the east unit of the seven-story structure, for $70,000 from the Dolph estate. It formerly was held by the May company under a 15-year lease which had 15 years to run.

The Equitable Building, a 10-story structure at the northwest corner of Sixth and Locust streets, owned by the Waldheim Realty & Investment Co., occupies the east half of the Locust street side of this block.

Exemplifying its confidence in the future of this section, Loews, Inc., operator of Loew's Theater, has renewed its lease on the one-story building at 3010 Olive street, in what is known as "Film Row," for a term of 10 years. The renewal was arranged by the Schuchert Realty Co.

The building has a frontage of 125 feet on Olive and is air-conditioned. It is used by the motion picture theater corporation for office, shipping and inspection purposes. The property is owned by the Fulton Investment Co., a holding company, composed of clients of the Schuchert Realty Co. of which Sam Schuchert is president.

The site occupied by Loew's Theater at the northeast corner of Eighth street and Washington avenue, comprising approximately a half city block, is held under a 99-year leases, with the exception of

SOCONY OIL SEEKS RIVER FRONT TRACT

Negotiations for Five-Acre Site for Distribution Center Under Way.

Socony Vacuum Oil Co., Inc., is negotiating for the purchase of a tract of about five acres on the river front as the site of a distributing plant and maintenance shops.

The company plans to pipe gasoline across the Mississippi River from the Lubrite Refinery, which it owns in East St. Louis, eliminating the present expense of trucking.

The tract, which lies between Potomac and President streets, the river front and the Missouri Pacific railroad tracks, is now held in the name of the Mercantile-Commerce Bank and Trust Co. as co-trustees for former stockholders of the William J. Lemp Brewing Co. It is at present undeveloped and is part of the old brewing company site.

The price mentioned in the negotiations is around $70,000. In addition the company will spend $150,000 or more in construction, not including pipeline costs.

DOWNTOWN AGENCY REPORTS FOUR BUSINESS LEASES

David Kessler and Louis Rubin have leased for a term of years a storeroom with basement in the Lesser Goldman Building at 1203 Washington avenue. It will be used as stock and salesroom for women's wearing apparel. The lessee plans to incorporate in the name of the Kessler Cloak & Suit Co. The lease was negotiated by the Mullin-Walters Realty Co.

George Curry has leased two stores at 625-27 Franklin avenue as a salesroom for men's and women's clothing.

John Starr, who recently leased through Mullin-Walters Realty Co., Inc., ground at 107 North Broadway for a parking lot, has purchased the lease held by Peter Gark on the two lots adjoining, which gives him a frontage of 100 feet on Broadway, which he has recently improved.

The B. & B. Ice Cream Co. has leased the storeroom at 7523 South Broadway.

SUBDIVISION WEST OF CLAYTON COURTHOUSE

Plans have been completed for subdividing the 168-acre tract of the Davis estate, lying west of the St. Louis County Court House, in Clayton. The new development will be known as Clayton Gardens. It was designed by Pitzman's Co. of Surveyors and Engineers, which will supervise installation of municipal and service improvements.

The Davis estate, represented by the Barngrove Realty Co., of which James L. Barngrove is president, has appointer Shaw & Francis, Inc. sales agent for the lots.

The tract will be developed and marketed in sections. Streets have been dedicated to public use. An indenture of restrictions, recorded with the plat, calls for 1½ and 2-story residences, subject to approved plans and specifications. As shown on the recorded plat, Forsythe boulevard has been extended northwestwardly to connect with Bonhomme road. North and South road (also known as Coleman avenue) has been extended northwardly to connect with Warder avenue in University City. It is designated on the plat as Brentwood boulevard. Both Forsythe and Brentwood boulevards are 80-foot thoroughfares. The lateral streets have a width of 60 feet each.

Grading of the platted section is now under way. The sewer system have been installed. Concrete streets and sidewalks will be constructed along with water, gas, electric mains.

The new Charles A. Shaw park adjoining on the north and recently dedicated, was formerly a part of the Davis tract.

CONSTRUCTION SHOWS FURTHER SEASONAL DROP

Total Value of Permits for 21 Cities in May, $98,280,854—16 Pct. Under April.

The volume of building permits issued in May showed a further seasonal decline from the preceding month, while the margin of increase over 1936 was the lowest recorded so far this year. In fact, it was the smallest gain, as compared with the corresponding month of the previous year, that has been reported since May, 1935.

The aggregate value of building permits for 215 cities of the United States was $98,280,854 during May, according to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. This was a decrease of 16.4 per cent from the April figure of $117,543,768, but an increase of 19.1 per cent as compared with the May, 1936, total of $82,510,596. The usually expected decline from April to May is about 6.6 per cent.

New York City also continued the decline of the previous month, the May figure of $19,346,563 for the five boroughs comparing with $27,110,582 in April, or a drop of 28.6 per cent. The increase over May last year, when permits amounted to $18,292,682, was only 5.8 per cent.

Outside New York City, the aggregate permit volume last month totaled $78,934,291, against $90,433,186 in April, or a loss of 12.7 per cent, while the increase over the 1936 comparative of $64,217,914 amounted to 22.9 per cent.

The group totals of building permit values for the 215 cities for May, this year and last, together with percentage changes, are shown in the following table:

one or two parcels, which are owned in fee by the theater corporation. Three stories in height, the building has a frontage on Washington of 137 feet, with a depth of 226 feet, extending through to Lucas avenue.

Capital for the theater building project, launched in 1924, was raised through a $650,000 serial bond issue underwritten by the Mercantile Trust Co., now the Mercantile-Commerce Bank & Trust Co. The bonds bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent matured serially from 1925 to 1939. In August, 1935, the bonds maturing between 1936 and 1939 were prepaid at par, plus a premium of 2 per cent, thereby releasing the mortgage which was in a form of a deed of trust. The bonds were held largely by the public which had purchased them at par.

LIFE INSURANCE FOR BUILDINGS

It Provides for Rebuilding or Replacement at Expiration of Policy.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The insurance salesmen who knocks on your door, or finally gets you on the telephone, or quarries you in your office, will soon be saying:

"I would like to interest you, Mister Public, in a life insurance policy on your office building and factory."

You may be a bit puzzled. Life insurance on property? Never heard of it. But it's here.

Following the enactment of legislation in Albany in May, the property-life insurance company of America is being organized in New York. In insurance circles, it was believed this field of insurance would eventually attract other companies. At the office of the superintendent of insurance, however, it was said no other company, so far as known, was in the process of organization.

The founder of the property-life company is Dr. Hans Heymann, a noted German financial expert and economist who developed the idea of life insurance on property before the World War and who organized the first such insurance company in Berlin some years ago.

Dr. Heymann is now living in this country.

The company expects to operate for a time in only three states, New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois.

In simple terms, property life insurance is the application of the idea and technique of personal life insurance to property—office buildings, stores, factories, homes, machinery, ships, automobiles.

It is insurance against dilapidation and obsolescence and is entirely separate from fire insurance, or storm or flood. It provides for rebuilding or replacement at the expiration of the policy. As in personal life insurance, the premium is based on actuarial principles applied to the average life of property in its various classifications.

"At the outset," Dr. Heymann said today, "we will insure only office buildings, factories and machinery.

"This kind of insurance has been applied very effectively to ships and there is a company in Hamburg engaged in this business. Eventually, we will extend our own business to include ships."

Homes and apartments, perhaps, offer the widest field for such insurance. But until his company operates on a more extensive national scale, Dr. Heymann said dwellings would not be insured.

The principle does not apply to the land, eliminating the application of property life insurance to farm deterioration. In insuring a building or factory, only the structure itself is insured, not the land upon which it is built.

"The main purpose of this insurance," Dr. Heymann said, "is the replacement of damages caused by age or dilapidation, which occur through commercial usage or through the elements, and the creation of a money equivalent which makes it possible to erect a new modern building at the expiration of the policy or at some other time."

In the event a structure or property is destroyed by fire or flood—or a disaster at sea, in the case of ships—before the expiration of the policy, the owner has available as a replacement fund the money paid in premiums.

No structure would be insured for more than 100 years. The average for business structures is 50 years. The average for machinery is 20 to 25 years, with no insurance for more than 40 years.

Dr. Heymann describes his principle of property life insurance as "positive insurance for rebuilding and replacement"—as against the present system of "writing off" for depreciation of property.

The first floor of the structure is divided into four stores. A decorating concern occupies the second floor. Offices comprise the third floor. The site, situated midway between Pine and Chestnut streets, has a frontage of 56 feet by a depth of 100 feet.

The improvements and ground are assessed at $55,000. Prior to its acquisition by Glick's client, it was owned by the Lesser-Goldman Co., which paid $81,000 for it, the agents state. The amount involved in the present transaction was not made public.

Our business has shown a constant increase throughout the depression years, as our product is without competition, performing a much needed service that cannot be duplicated.

This product is made in factories in principal countries including the United States, and is backed by tremendous resources.

As there is nothing like our product, selling experience is not a necessary requirement. If selected, we train you thoroughly in our factory branch school at no expense to you.

You make no investment of any nature in our business, and we finance everything.

Our men are well paid. Last week, in our St. Louis branch, we paid E. J. R., former cash register salesman, $78.98 for the preceding week's work; R. M., $67.86; R. R., $51.00; H. M., $49.21; L. B., $60.88; I. S., $35.80; V. H., $54.11; W. S., $39.78; E. B., $48.01; O. S., $46.02; A. H., $56.55; D. M., $73.08; C. R., $60.81.

If you are selected you will work with and meet these men who are making fine weekly incomes because they are selling something people want and need.

No matter what your experience has been, if you are honest, reliable and have the desire to succeed, we will be pleased to grant you a personal interview and you may be fortunate in being selected as one of the five men. THE MARCH OF FASHION

By Sylvia Stiles

USUALLY when the calendar indicates the twentieth of June, summer wardrobes begin to look a little jaded because of too much exposure to wilting weather. Not so this year with temperatures below normal averages and a rain cape the best bet in the way of an accessory.

So the evening frocks that dare to brave the elements for roof garden or country club dancing and the afternoon dresses that venture to garden parties (especially numerous this season) look as crisp and fresh as though the wearers hadn't purchased them weeks ago. It is a lucky break of fashion that brilliant colors happen to be popular too because it takes gayety of fabric, footwear and millinery to help us through the weather hazards.

The brilliance of summer hues impresses the fashion observer along with toeless sandals, very wide-brimmed hats that frequently are flower trimmed and large flower prints used both for frocks and accessories. Interesting also and encouraging, too, is the attention which women are giving now to the details of a costume.

—o-o—

The clubwomen had a "dress-up" party Wednesday afternoon which gave an inkling of what active matrons prefer in summer attire. Planned originally as a garden party, but transferred indoors to the Monday Club of Webster Groves, this party, arranged for the benefit of the Eighth District of the Missouri Federation, brought out long dresses and picture hats as well as more tailored costumes.

—o-o—

● NOTEWORTHY among the attractive ensembles was that of Mrs. Joseph T. Davis, one of the state chairmen who was an honorary hostess. This was an orchid-tinted lace frock of the shirtwaist type having a floor length skirt over a rose pink slip. Her wide-brimmed hat and her pumps were white and she wore a tiny corsage of white rosebuds.

Another floor length dress of the shirtwaist type was of navy linen printed in white and collared with white pique. This was the choice of Mrs. E. J. Heiligers, whose wide-brimmed hat was of starched white linen and whose accessories also were white.

—o-o—

Among other hostesses and assistants in floor-length dresses were Mrs. Foster Brown, whose black marquisette frock had a tailored neckline tied at the front, butterfly sleeves attached with rows of tucking, falling below the elbows, and a sash combining flag blue and salmon pink taffeta; and Mrs. Forrest Hemker in a becoming crepe frock of aqua blue, its bolero jacket fastened high at the neckline and its contrasting sash of dusty pink and wine crepe a most effective accent.

—o-o—

● MRS. JASPER BLACKBURN, who had planned to entertain the clubwomen in her garden until the weather man ordered otherwise, was beautifully dressed in a cape costume of black net striped with white. The street length frock was of the shirtwaist type. It was collared with white waffle pique and fastened with novelty red, white and black buttons. The skirt pleats showed the effectiveness of the stripes well placed together. The hip length cape of the printed net had a black yoke. Mrs. Blackburn's medium brimmed black straw hat was banded with glistening white and had two white metal wings posed at the front.

—o-o—

PLAYING BRIDGE at another garden party in the county on a recent afternoon were several smartly attired St. Louisans. There was Mrs. Fred Hoffmann, for example, in a costume illustrating some of the leading points of summer fashion. Her sheer crepe frock of a very light gray tone was splashed with flower clusters having a dominance of blue and deep rose. The blouse was shirred at the center front from the V-neckline to the waist and sleeves were similarly adorned on the top of the arm. A heading of the fabric was caught in the shirring to give a graceful and flattering finish to the drapery. The skirt was gored for hemline fullness. A wide-brimmed baku hat of bright blue had multicolored flowers forming the top of the crown. Sandals and bag exactly matched the hat in color.

In the same party was Mrs. Roy Bischoff, whose frock was of the new satin-finished printed faille, the all-over pattern of red and blue practically covering its white back-

WHAT IT COSTS to BE A MOVIE STAR

● It's Not What They Earn Before the Camera That Is Important, It's What They Keep for Themselves—How Actresses Invest Remains of Big Incomes.

By Jeanette Meehan

MAE WEST . . . HER NAME LEADS ALL THE REST.

MYRNA LOY . . . BUYS BONDS TO KEEP THE WOLF FROM THE DOOR.

JEANETTE MACDONALD . . . TURNS SILVERY NOTES INTO GOLD ONES.

HOLLYWOOD, June 19.

AT LEAST once every six months some Hollywood actor will walk out of a $4000-a-week contract because he wants more money. His fellow actors may sympathize with him, but to the average layman a star's ebullient exit from such lucrative employment appears to be plain idiocy.

Pity the poor movie star!—trying to make four grand stretch out over a period of seven days!

It sounds terribly silly, we know, but there's more truth than humor in the rumor that there are several famous personalities in Hollywood who can't AFFORD to be stars. Honestly, it costs a lot of money to make $4000 a week.

Yeah, you say, just give me that much money and I'd show 'em a savings account or three!

Undoubtedly you would, but you're not a star and you don't live in Hollywood, and there's a mint of difference.

Stars DO make a lot of money, but not as much as you think. If you're from Missouri, let's take a certain star; or, rather, let's take his pay check. He makes $6000 a week.

Before the star ever sees that voucher for his services, several axes have already had a whack at it. The studio has already deducted about $168 for pensions, the Motion Picture Relief Fund and the Studio Club (for relief within the studio). Then his agent comes around and collects the check, deducts 10 per cent of $6000 for himself and sends another 5 per cent to the star's business manager.

Now there's about $4932 left. Of this $1260 is set aside for state and Federal taxes. Then $150 goes toward a retainer for a lawyer, $75 to a secretary and $50 to a press agent. That leaves $3397.

—o-o—

HANG on, that's not all. This particular star says that another $500 of his weekly check is divided among the costs of insurance policies (picture people pay tremendous premiums), trainers, masseurs, bodyguards, fan mail, dentists, maintenance of a screen wardrobe, a studio valet and private charities. That leaves $2897, and the star hasn't yet bought a lamb chop, and Cousin Agatha back in Ohio hasn't had her bite yet.

But $2897 a week! That scarcely moves you to tears. Why, that's more than most people make in a year.

Well, there's the cost of living. It's no secret that stars are outrageously overcharged for everything from rent to a box of bath scent. A few of the more canny ones get around this by asking their non-professional friends to do part of their shopping for them.

Hollywood has to keep up with the Joneses, too. It's good business—looking affluent. So the star lives in a nice house on the right side of the tracks. He drives a nice car and has a couple of servants. Perhaps the house is a little nicer than it need be—or even a bit too rococo. His car may be a little more expensive than necessary, and no doubt it would run just as well without that silver-plated surrealist goose on the hood. No doubt one servant would do as well as two—but, gosh, when a fellow makes a quarter of a million dollars he owes himself a little something.

Entertainment is an item. When a star does $300,000 worth of work a year, he naturally feels that he can afford at least $50,000 for pleasure, but few of them can. However, if he goes to parties, he must give them, even though his dinner parties are always bigger than he intended them to be and even though the guests eat more caviar than he expected them to eat.

Remember the day you started out with $3.95 to buy a sweater, and bought a hat you didn't need for $5.95 instead? Well, when a star's income amounts to a small fortune and he does his share for relatives, relief and dear old Uncle Sam, he feels entitled to get some kick out of what's left, so every now and then he goes overboard and does something he can't afford—like learning to play polo or buying a race horse. Sure, he ought to know better—but he's only human, after all.

Then there are the trade papers, to boot. For good will purposes a star is obliged to subscribe to at least 10 local sheets, each one asking him to take out full-page advertisements at least twice a year at $200 a page. In return, the star's name is kept before competitive producers.

And don't overlook the "little woman" in the picture. The missus must look as prosperous as the star and, anyway, most screen husbands are notably generous to their wives. The law usually forces them to be generous to their ex-wives. Heaven preserve that $2897 if the fellow has to pay alimony. The estranged wife of one male star gets exactly half of everything he makes.

Thus, when the week is over, there's not a couple of thousand left to put away in the old sock. What the star does put away might look like a sizeable amount to the rest of us, but it's not nearly enough to make him the millionaire that the world thinks he is.

—o-o—

EVEN those stars who have made and saved a million didn't do it with unadulterated movie dollars. Ruth Roland made hers in real estate. Constance Bennett and Mary Pickford made a good portion of theirs in the stock market.

Just to be really convincing about the high cost of stardom, let's recall some of the expenses.

Fan mail. The studio takes care of most stars' fan mail, but Bing Crosby takes care of his own and it costs him $35,000 a year. Bob Taylor employs two girls besides his own secretary to take care of his mail. Even some of the smaller-salaried girls, like Eleanore Whitney and Gail Patrick, think it's good business to take care of their own fan letters. It costs them $900 a year.

No important star can get along without a press agent. Hollywood is swarming with newspaper correspondents, magazine writers, authors and editors—all of importance to the actor's present and future standing. They demand a lot of service. One wants a picture of the star in his living room, another wants an interview on why-I-have-never-married, and other wants something else again. The studio press departments take over as much of this burden as possible but there is always plenty of work left over for a personal representative.

BIG MOVIE SALARIES

IN a Treasury report to Congress, made public by the House Ways and Means Committee last Jan. 6, the following persons were shown to be the 20 highest-salaried movie stars for 1935:

Mae West	$480,833	Fred Astaire	$127,875
Marlene Dietrich	368,000	Harold Lloyd	125,000
Bing Crosby	318,907	Katharine Hepburn	121,572
Gary Cooper	311,000	Charles Ruggles	106,278
Charley Chaplin	260,000	Herbert Marshall	105,000
Irene Dunne	208,055	Margaret Sullavan	102,431
Warner Baxter	208,000	Gladys Swarthout	101,833
Janet Gaynor	169,750	Jack Oakie	101,625
Joe E. Brown	173,438
Stan Laurel	156,266
Carole Lombard	156,083
Eddie Cantor	150,000

There was a mention of wardrobe. Here's where the feminine stars get off easily. The studio provides their clothes for modern pictures, but the luckless males must provide their own. In order to live up to what the well-dressed sophisticate should wear in the very best screen parlors, Bill Powell spends hundreds of dollars a month for clothes. An itemized report of his clothes closet reads like—well, it reads like this: Four dress suits, five tuxedoes, 42 street suits, 12 overcoats, three dozen gloves, 26 pairs of sport trousers, 37 pairs of shoes, 51 hats and an even 154 neckties.

To maintain a wardrobe like that is another dollar sign up for consideration. The cleaning charges alone come pretty high and pretty often. Any suit worn with make-up has to be cleaned before a second wearing.

Then there are the dentist bills. It's too bad to disillusion you if you didn't know, but, nine times out of 10, those dazzling white teeth that you so admire in your favorite actor or actress aren't teeth at all. They're porcelain caps and they cost $100 a piece.

Not only that, but the star (who pays the bill) must have at least two sets, one being kept at the studio. Then, if a cap is lost or broken during the middle of a scene, an exact replica will be handy and no damage will be done.

In fact, the first thing a studio does with a new contract player is send him to a dentist. But that doesn't necessarily mean that he has bad bicuspids. He may have a mouth full of perfectly healthy, attractive teeth, but minute flaws, invisible to the naked eye, have a way of showing up like gargoyles in front of the camera.

Then there's the bill for "surface significance." Beauty, in other words.

The color of a star's hair is seldom a dye of her own choosing. (If she had her own way it probably wouldn't be dyed at all.) She may have perfectly lovely chestnut brown locks, but if the cameraman says she'd better go on the gold standard—she goes.

—o-o—

ON top of that, when a feminine star is working her hair must be shampooed every night and retinted every other day; her fingernails must be manicured every day and her skin must be kept in perfect condition to withstand the pore-menace of grease paint. To this end, such girls as Jeanette McDonald and Marlene Dietrich find their beauty parlor bills as high as $100 a week.

Was there a mention of trainers? You bet. Health is even more important than beauty. When such athletic stars as Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Joel McCrea go to work in a picture, they literally don't see daylight for six weeks, sometimes for six months. Under those hot lights the muscles soften and the star invariably loses weight.

About the Jones family. Not everyone keeps up with them in one fell swoop. Joan Crawford usually entertains, on the installment plan, with small but elegant dinner parties. When she gives her occasional Sunday night supper parties, she likes to serve wieners with garlic.

Kay Francis gives one huge party a year to repay all of her social obligations. For this event she usually rents an entire large restaurant or country club. She has hundreds of guests. The bill runs to thousands of dollars.

Weddings as a rule don't cost much in Hollywood. The stars are usually so busy that the best they can do is an elopement to Yuma, Ariz. An exception was the marriage of Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond. The bill was $25,000.

The Basil Rathbones recently made headlines with their "Bride and Groom" party. The date was an important one—one about which the Rathbones were sincerely sentimental—their fifteenth wedding anniversary. They planned the affair without fanfare, publicity or photographers and the first guest list numbered exactly 20 people.

But, after the way of parties, it grew and grew—just as your last beer bust did. It grew until it grew out of the Rathbone house and they had to take over a local restaurant for their party of 187 guests. It was all very elegant, and people thought, my, what a lot of money it cost! It did. But at that, compare it to a few of society's "coming out" parties, and it looks like a backyard barbecue.

Yet, in spite of the expenses of stardom, picture people DO save money. The sight of the Gables and Garbos of yesterday as $5-a-day extras has caused many a star to sell his yacht. Now they're all future-conscious; that's why they pay that 5 per cent to a business manager. Barring another depression, there will be no Crawfords or Lombards in the extra ranks tomorrow.

Most of them believe in annuities, like Claudette Colbert; or in stocks, like Norma Shearer; or in bonds, like Myrna Loy; or in the diamond standard, like Mae West.

by Lucius Beebe

NEW YORK, June 19.

NEW YORK'S first razzle-dazzle resort designed according to the tenets of "functional" architecture is Ben Marden's Riviera, which actually isn't in Manhattan at all, but across the George Washington Bridge, on the Jersey Palisades. It opened last week on an almost cosmic scale of popping corks, bedizened flunkies, clamoring celebrities and the blinding noiselessness of photographers' flashes, and its emergence over the Hudson marked the last stage of transition from the oldtime roadhouse and lobster palace of the vanished '90s. The 10-course shore dinner and the handle-bar mustaches of the ostentatiously discreet waiter are one with the cable car and 5-cent beer, and in their place are streamlining and chromium, pages in cinema liveries and smooth waiter captains, most of them not more than 30 and to a man wearing blue or tan dinner jackets.

The Riviera has the most spectacular setting of any night club we know of and is perched hundreds of feet above the Hudson, where the night boats steam with infinite placidity in the direction of Albany and where the background of the lights of Spuyten Duyvil and Yonkers are for all the world like a too perfect stage backdrop. The new restaurant itself is circular in design and its luxury features include such essays in crazy luxe as a salmon and yellow decor illustrated with surrealist murals, a revolving stage, and dance floor equipped with indirect lighting, which makes it seem that the dancers are revolving on an inverted sky studded with gleaming stars; a receding roof, which gently rises six feet and slides out of sight, while the glass walls of the entire structure sink into pockets so that the premises can be made open air in 10 seconds; a mobile bandwagon, which slides one band off and the other on without missing a beat, and two nightly floor shows, with a special performance at 3 o'clock in the morning of an entirely new routine.

FOR ALL its rather breathless modernity and economy of space and design, the Riviera is entirely comfortable, and opening night found the choosey and foresighted in tables around the circular terrace elevated about seven feet and running the circumference of the room rather than in the ringside seats around the stage apron. The Broadwayites who insisted on ringside locations missed the magnificent vista of the river at night and were vastly trodden and mussed by dancers coming and going from the floor. The floor show was a racy, handsomely costumed if not too articulate interlude, populated with pretty girls in brisk ballet routines; Marion Pierce, the socialite diseuse; Mickey Alpert's orchestra and a brace of dancing midgets who are actually personable, gay and expert hoofers.

The food is a vast improvement over that at the old Riviera and the management contrived to serve an opening night jam-packed house with creditable dispatch. The bar serves as good a Daiquiri as is available this side of Sloppy Joe's, and the wine card, if very expensive, is comprehensive. The only fault this ever querulous department could find was that a Bollinger '26 listed on the card didn't exist, but came up in the '24 vintage. As we were guests of the management, we said nothing except to ask for a second bottle.

OBSERVATION of summer drinking habits around town discloses a crescent vogue for those sublimated Daiquiris which are variously known as beachcombers, rum parfaits, Havana Daiquiris or Cariocas. They look like a water-ice arrangement and are served in a broad, shallow champagne coup glass. They originated, alcoholic archeologists claim, some years ago in Cuba, when ice was a great deal more of a luxury than white rum and were favored by the affluent thirsty in the bar of the old Inglaterra Hotel.

The first place we ever saw them featured was at the Beachcomber bar, in Hollywood, three years ago, where Don the Beachcomber, achieved fame and fortune compounding them for 75 cents, in a size to last an hour. Hence the appellation beachcomber, and John Krimsky later billed them at the American Music Hall during the run of "Murder in the Red Barn."

We called on the American Spirits people, who make Carioca rum and obviously favor that name, and their formula for this cooler follows: "Add juice of half green lime to ounce and a half of white rum and level teaspoonful of powdered sugar. Frappe with a level scoop of powdered sugar in an electric shaker until crystals form and by

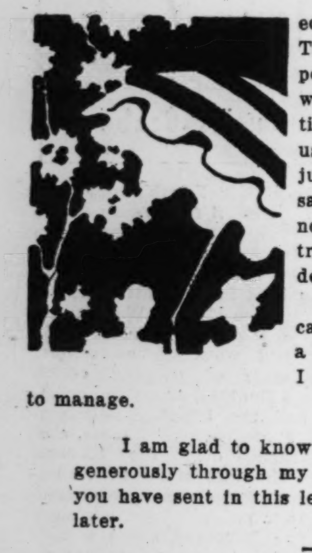
Martha Carr

Dear Martha Carr:

SOME weeks ago I wrote you asking your help in procuring a formal for a needy country girl about to graduate from high school. Thanks to you, three lovely dresses were sent me, and a fourth offered.



I sent on the three, and have had an ecstatic letter of gratitude from the girl. The kind ladies who sent the gowns will perhaps like to know that she used the white dress, remodeled, for her graduation, has kept the black dress for later use, and wore the lovely blue one to her junior-senior banquet. They absolutely saved the occasion for her, as she could not have bought them. To add to the distress of her family, her father died suddenly since I wrote you.

She has been given a position in a girls' camp in Wisconsin for the summer, and a country school to teach this winter; so I think she and her mother will be able to manage.

E. L.

I am glad to know that this young girl was helped so generously through my column. The other request which you have sent in this letter, we may be able to look after later.

—o—o—

Dear Mrs. Carr:

● WE ARE CONSTANT READERS of your column and enjoy it very much. We are four girls of the teen age and are all out of school. We think we are too young to go dancing, so please suggest something we could do in the evening to occupy our time. Thanking you,

THE TEENAGERS.

There is no reason why you could not occasionally have a little dancing party, if you do not stay out too late. If you have not learned how to dance you might take some lessons during the vacation.

There are a good many games of skill you can play both indoors and outdoors, and games like ping-pong for a rainy evening, too. Send me a self-addressed, stamped envelope and I will mail you "Outdoor Games," the "Treasure Hunt," the "Scavenger Hunt," and other simple and easy ways to amuse yourself.

While you have extra time, in the summer, it is an excellent time to learn to knit and to "sew a fine seam"—to learn how to make your own clothes and to take first lessons in housekeeping and cooking.

Dear Mrs. Carr:

● SOME TIME AGO I wrote you about my trouble. My mother took pity on me and kept me, but now only she and my brother are working and there are six in the family. My baby has to have milk and clothes and I need things myself. Mrs. Carr, I don't know what to do; do you think it would be wise to put the baby in a boarding home until he gets older and I get older also? I am only 16. When I can get a job I can have someone take care of him at home.

Mrs. Carr, I love my baby and don't want to give him up for good; it would kill me to do that; but I guess I will have to manage that way for a while at least. Please give me your advice.

THANK YOU.

There are a number of homes which might arrange to take your little boy for a while and I could give you the names; but I believe the Board of Children's Guardians or the Children's Aid Society would know better than I, and tell you just how to manage about this.

—o—o—

Dear Mrs. Carr:

WOULD YOU TELL ME where I could join a girl's good soft ball team. I have had a lot of practice and I think I could play any position.

ANN.

Communicate with Miss Mary Fernandez, 6901 Pennsylvania. Girls over 16 may inquire of Mr. Edward Allen, 4559 Pope avenue.

—o—o—

My dear Mrs. Carr:

● I NOTICED in your column an inquiry concerning a choral organization, which meets in the summer. The Lowther A Cappella Chorus is a non-sectarian group which does both sacred and secular work. It has been in existence a year, during which time it has made 13 public appearances. It is composed of mixed voices and meets each Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock at 4332 Humphrey. For further information call me at LAclede 9933.

(MRS.) HELEN HAINES LOWTHER, Director.

—o—o—

Dear Mrs. Carr:

WOULD YOU KINDLY print the address of Cecil B. De Mille in your column?

DOLL.

Hollywood, California, is all that is necessary.

—o—o—

Dear Mrs. Carr:

PLEASE PRINT what is necessary of this letter in order that my husband may see it; the rest leave out.

I have been married 10 years; at the time we were married I had a daughter, 9, and he a son, 2 years old. My daughter was married last March, but I have raised the son, who is now 13 years old. My husband has left me because, he says, I am older than he. The truth is that his brother and his wife have parted us and now they have him stay with them. My husband makes fairly good money, but he does not keep me from going hungry.

Five years ago, this same brother and his wife made him drunk and he hit me, causing me to lose the sight in one eye. I forgave him, because he was so distressed about it, he was pitiful. He went on his knees and begged me to take him back. But again he has allowed them to turn him against me. The boy prefers to stay with me. I still love my husband and would take him back if he would come back alone and be kind to his son and me.

A FORSAKEN WIFE.

Cases such as yours might be settled by your minister, a friend you may have in common, and, perhaps you might feel it right to go to the Court of Domestic Relations. Talk this over with your husband; he must see that he has more obligation than just to hand you a pittance, neglect his decent obligations to you and his own son, and run around with irresponsive relatives.

THE WORLD AS WOMEN SEE IT

THE TIE THAT BINDS

Odds 6 to 1 Against Both Partners Surviving 50 Years of Marriage, Statistics Show.

By Virginia Irwin.

THE way statisticians and students of marriage problems figure things out these days, the 1937 June bride can tell pretty well even before she mumbles "I do" whether she's going to live long enough—and with the same husband—to celebrate a golden wedding anniversary or be a candidate for divorce in short order.

In New York the other day a life insurance company issued a statistical bulletin quoting 6-to-1 odds against both partners in the average marriage surviving 50 years of married life. And some time ago in Los Angeles and Chicago two famous students of family problems announced that they had arrived at a composite picture of a person who cannot stay hitched.

Speaking strictly from the how-long-will-you-live standpoint, the figure juggler employed by the insurance company reported: "Taking about an average case, in which the bride is 22 years old and the bridegroom 25, the chance that they will both survive to celebrate their golden wedding 50 years later is just about one in six. Cases of late marriage have only a very slim chance of celebrating their golden anniversary, so, for example, if the bride is 37 and the bridegroom 42 at the time of their marriage, they stand just about one chance in a thousand of surviving until the fiftieth anniversary day of their wedding."

Of course the June bride who right now feels that there are too few hours in the day and too few years in life to spend with her brand new spouse can't do much about reducing the odds against her and her husband's being alive and kicking 50 years hence. She can make him wear his rubbers when it rains and herself avoid braving a snowstorm in a backless dress, but she's still got to jump the divorce hurdle before a golden wedding celebration is even a possibility.

For the girl who wants to know right now whether she's going to be a grass widow or wife wedded 50 years, Dr. Paul Popenoe, director of the Institute of Family Relations in Los Angeles, and Prof. William Ogburn, the University of Chicago's authority on family problems, evolved a yardstick by which she can measure her marriage. If she or her husband fit the picture of the individual whom Dr. Popenoe and Prof. Obgurn painted as a likely divorce candidate, it's time to begin figuring on ways and means to avoid being introduced to a divorce judge.

And here's the portrait of the girl (or boy) who's likely to run into marital rough seas: She (or he) is a native-born Protestant, childless and prefers renting a furnished flat to possessing property. She prides herself on modern ideas and pooh-poohs old fashioned standards. She is bossy, entirely wrapped up in herself, and never troubles to salve her partner's ego. She expects marriage to remain a romance and is unable to regard it as a partnership.

Says Dr. Popenoe: "First, don't be childless." If you're determined not to join the ranks of divorcees, start to build a family. A tousled-headed youngster is the best insurance against divorce ever invented.

The second piece of advice is: "Own things." Next to children, there's nothing like a few sticks of furniture, a house and lot, or even a battered old buggy to cement the tie that binds. You may have to do without a summer ensemble and your boy friend without a new set of golf sticks to meet the next payment on your dining room suite, but the sacrifice will tie you both to the same post.

Next, says Dr. Popenoe: "Don't scorn to do the things that grandpa and grandma did." You don't have to put up pickles and marmalade, but you can take a genuine interest in cooking, even if you don't do it yourself. Your boy friend doesn't have to carry in coal for the old baseburner like grandpa did, but he can find plenty of odd jobs around the house to make him feel that he has a hand in running the home. And neither do you have to sit around the old coal oil lamp in the evenings, but you can plan your leisure hours together to build up a companionship that will carry you over the rough spots.

The fourth commandment, if you would stay tied until your golden wedding, is: "Don't be bossy." Try to arrange your marriage on something of a partnership basis and remember it's something like running a business. Each partner may have his own ideas, but the two have to agree or the firm will end up in the divorce court.

And last says Dr. Popenoe: "Don't expect your marriage to remain a romance. Lovers who are capable of becoming friends can be married and stay so for a long time."

—o-o—

THIS may sound slightly disappointing to the bride who has visioned her own marriage as one of those perpetual romances so often encountered in fiction, but as Dr. Oliver M. Butterfield, ex-minister and authority on marriage problems, has pointed out: "Married happiness is not an automatic miracle, but a practical achievement, something that can be won by love and patience and preserved by common sense."

Dr. Butterfield also has his ideas on how to make your marriage last long enough to be able to invite your friends in for a golden wedding blowout. He insists that happy marriages are rarely the product of chance and advises engagements long enough to permit the affianced pair to discover whether they are apt to get on each other's nerves. Hasty decisions, he points out, are almost always regretted and cites the statistics of a certain state where three days' notice is required before a marriage license is issued to prove his point. In one year 2700 couples applied for licenses and never came back.

"Marriage," warns Dr. Butterfield, "is a process of constantly adjusting two egos, and a couple cannot know too well in advance what occasions for conflict and irritation may arise. Unless they have been keeping company under a wide range of circumstances that reveal the habits and attitudes of each to the other, a couple is marrying blindfolded; once the bandage is off, trouble is likely to follow."

But even if you have been "keeping company" under the range of circumstances advised by Dr. Butterfield, you'd best tread softly for the first five years of marriage. Students of family problems agree that couples who manage to weather the first five years of their marriage stand a fairly good chance of sticking together for life.

With all these don'ts and warnings and insurance figures on the odds against the average marriage lasting 50 years, the June bride may get the idea that she's tackled a tough problem, but against the dark side of the picture is the encouraging thought that it's easier to make a go of marriage than of the grocery business. Of all men that go into the grocery business, 70 per cent flop; of the men and women who tackle matrimony, 70 per cent succeed. And in spite of all the howlings about our divorce courts being cluttered up with folks who are sick of their bargains, the divorce rate in the United States is only 16 per cent, which would indicate that with the application of a little common sense, and if she picked the right guy in the first place, the June bride has a pretty good chance of making her marriage last.

THE BRIDE OF 1937 . . . WHAT ARE HER CHANCES FOR HAPPINESS?

Ornaments in Matrons' Hair

EVERY woman simply must wear ornaments in her hair if she is to be dressed up for evening, according to the current mode, but what shall matrons choose? Flowers suit the young girls all right but not the matrons. Most of them have to admit that they look a little giddy with orchids dotted over their coiffure or with a wreath of daisies covering graying hair.

Wear feathers, is the order of the fashion dictators who suggest tiny ostrich tips or more dramatic clusters of stiff feathers for the very dignified. The coronation festivities have much to do with this decision.

ST. LOUIS MARCH OF FASHION

ground. The blouse had a draped front with a rather high V neckline. White belt, large straw hat and white sandals completed an attractive ensemble.

—o-o—

THE VOGUE of green and white, which is of increasing importance as the summer season advances, was illustrated by the sheer redingote costume of Mrs. Harry S. Bischoff. Patterned of deep green and white her redingote with its flaring skirt and tailored white collar and cuffs was most becoming and attractive. A wide-brimmed hat of white baku and white sandals added to the charm of the summery costume.

Brown and white printed crepe in a small conventional allover pattern fashioned the frock and matching hip length fitted jacket of Mrs. F. T. Grice. Hers was a costume that looks well rain or shine and is as ideally suited to summer travel wear as to general daytime neds in St. Louis. A brimless toque with front emphasis in the trimming and matching bag and sandals of gabardine and patent leather were noted.

Sheer black evening frocks can't be surpassed for beauty and sophistication in a season when Paris as well as the United States is making so much of this outstanding mode. I saw Mrs. Walter L. Rust dancing at one of the country clubs on a recent evening in an especially flattering model. It was of black marquisette over black taffeta, the skirt's fullness accentuated by bands of taffeta which circled it at intervals from the high waistline to the hemline and the low cut bodice covered with a jaunty little bolero jacket of the tulle embroidered with white flowers. There were white gardenias on the bodice to accent the contrast of white.

—o-o—

PASTEL TINTS and white continue the preference of many college girls for summer dances. A group of Washington University girls at a country club dance there displayed a preference for the pastels. Miss Ruth May Sackmann, for example, had on a peach colored lace frock designated in the redingote style and accented with blue forget-me-nots and matching blue ribbon. Gray mousseline was worn by Miss Emily Davidson. The skirt was very wide at the hemline, and the sleeves of the V-necked bodice were exceedingly bouffant.

—o-o—

THOSE BRIGHT floral designs which appear on white shantung or peasant linen are quite typical of the summer mode as reflected in tailored frocks for general daytime wear. Representative of the vogue is the two-piece dress of Mrs. C. E. Sidler. The overblouse has a tailored collar which fastens high and short, tailored sleeves. A medium brimmed panama hat that is effective with this dress has a scarf of bright tan tied with short streamers at the back.

Don't Interrupt the Speaker -:- -:- By Marjorie Hillis

HOW many times have you been in a group, lately, in which some one made half a dozen attempts to tell a story and always was interrupted before she got well under way? It may have been a really good story, and every one but the interrupter may have been really anxious to hear it. The person who was telling it (or trying to) was probably far more interesting than the person who interrupted. Little facts like these never stop a seasoned interrupter. It just takes a few words from somebody else to set her off, and you might as well let her finish. She will anyway.

This is one of the most unattractive habits I know of. It is not merely inexcusably rude—it is also a world-beating method of losing friends, arousing irritation, and making oneself generally unpopular. But oddly, a great many women who spend a good proportion of their time making themselves as attractive as they can in other ways will let this habit grow on them. Put them in a group and they punctuate all conversations with a constant stream of interruptions. You either have to talk them down or let them monopolize the floor, and neither helps the success of the majority of parties.

A lot has been written about the importance of being a good listener, and most of it is true, but learning to listen isn't one-quarter as important as learning not to interrupt. There are occasions when concentrated listening is almost too much to ask of any one, considering what she would have to listen to. And sometimes it isn't necessary—the person talking is so carried away by his own conversation that he's perfectly satisfied so long as you don't interrupt him.

But a lot of women do interrupt him, to say nothing of interrupting everybody else with whom they come in contact. They can be almost guaranteed to make you feel, eventually, that nothing you had to say would be worth the trouble of saying it.

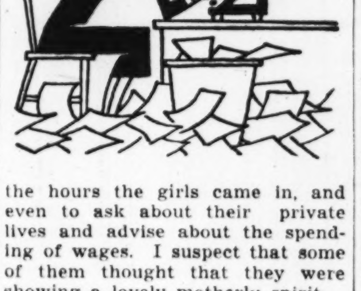
This isn't even very good business. I once knew a really excellent editor who just couldn't resist breaking in on every one at editorial conferences. The conferences were called in order to discuss ideas from all the staff, but it was next to impossible to get the ideas complete when this editor was present. And somehow, she never got any farther than her original position. Her work was exceptional, in many respects, but I am sure that, one by one, every thwarted fellow worker acquired a small, almost conscious prejudice against her.

The truth is that people don't like to be interrupted. If it happens too often, they don't even like the interrupter.

—o-o—

EVERY ONCE in a while I am moved to sing the praise of the modern working woman, and one of her virtues, in my opinion, is that she has a higher average of success with maids, when she can afford a maid, than the woman who doesn't work. The secret is that she looks upon a maid as another working woman, with a right to definite free time, a private life of her own, and reasonable independence in the performance of her job.

I can remember dozens of women among my mother's acquaintances who treated their maids as though they were sort of adopted children, often not quite bright. They not only planned and directed every detail of their work, thereby crushing all initiative and hampering their development, but they didn't hesitate to switch days off to suit their own convenience, to criticise the hours the girls came in, and even to ask about their private lives and advise about the spending of wages. I suspect that some of them thought that they were showing a lovely motherly spirit.



The business women I know today have learned from experience that you do any work better and enjoy it more if it is your own responsibility. Those who have maids tell them what they want accomplished in a day, or a week, and as much as is necessary about the way they want it done, and after that it's up to the maid to work things out for herself. If she can't, they get another maid—but usually she can. Nothing develops people more than to have to take responsibility. And as a rule it adds to their happiness, besides. It's a lot more fun to do any job in your own way, and it's apt to seem a lot more worth doing as well as you can.

Squirrel Coats Are Forecast For Next Fall

Leading Furriers Are Featuring Them in Advance Showings.

ALL of those women who admired gray squirrel coats on their friends, saved their dollars to purchase one and when the coveted wrap was within their grasp, saw it snatched from the fashion picture, may own one at last.

Squirrel again is high in fashion's favor and when the advance showings and sales of winter merchandise are introduced next month there'll be more squirrel coats than any other. At least that is what the style forecasters tell us and what the leading furriers are featuring at the moment in New York.

The recent annual show of advanced fall fur fashions which was held in New York City indicated that squirrel has returned to popularity with a bang and that it is to be worn for spectator sports as well as for dressier occasions. Incidentally sports furs are to be stressed with the classic swagger and the boxy model dominant and new attention given to dressmaker details to enhance sports costumes.

OUTSTANDING among the models exhibited was a squirrel topcoat that was very British in its tailoring. This had the recognized English notched lapels, square shoulders and side flaps made of inserts of bayberry green tweed. Six large tweed buttons were placed in double-breasted rows. A longer-than-hip-length swagger coat also presented another interesting treatment of the fur. It introduced pea jacket pockets on the sides and one breast pocket into which was tucked a wine colored 'kerchief. Matching wine colored leather outlined the small collar and the pockets while matching leather buttons were placed in groups of threes down the left side. Also striking for sportswear was a tuxedo type of swagger coat that could be worn two ways—as a double-breasted swagger when the coat was closed or as a tuxedo when the fronts were buttoned back.

Among the more formal models were several capes which were distinctive and flattering in their use of the squirrel. One of these designed in the French grenadier manner was floor length, the skins worked in split fashion like mink. A pointed ascot tie of the squirrel and accents of some gray chiffon were arresting. Another floor length cape with its own hood was Far East in its inspiration. Antique gold and silver corded medallions used in pendant fashion hung down in the back and circled the neckline to form a clasp at the front.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN

By Dorothy Coleman

SOME of these days we are going to incite a first-class rebellion against the tyranny of salespersons. Granted that they are in a better position to know about merchandise, still we think we're entitled to the final say-so as to the becomingness of a hat or the appropriateness of certain shoes.

A salesman flatly refused last week to sell us the pair of sandals we had our heart set on. We inadvertently had let drop the fact that they were to be worn with a bridesmaid's dress.

"Young lady," said he severely, "I can't conscientiously let you have those shoes. They are for house or beach wear, and wouldn't do at all for the purpose for which you intend them."

"But they won't show anyway under a long dress,"—our protests were feeble—"and they'd be much the most sensible thing I could get for parading down a church aisle and standing hours in a receiving line."

"That makes no difference. I happen to be the buyer in this department; I happen to know what I am talking about. Day in and day out I preach to my salesmen—'Sell the right shoe for the right wear.' I cannot subscribe to any compromise."

Always a little humble in the presence of authority, we gave in and took the others. Now if we wobble down that aisle and have to step clear out of our boots before the recessional, it's nobody's fault but that dreadful man's. He's probably a Fascist at heart, sold on the idea of the totalitarian state, in which everyone does as he's told.

Waitresses can be just as dictatorial. A friend of ours has reported a recent encounter with a strong-willed member of the sorority. Spring was in the air that day and as he looked over the menu nothing tempted him so much as a bowl of cucumber salad, cool and slippy.

Up spake he, "I'll have cucumber salad, please."

"You don't want that," came the peremptory reply. "That's got onions in it."

Probably if we weren't so stubborn, we would realize such advice was well-meant, and accept it gracefully, but, darn it, we hate to be bullied!

ZONA GALE writes in a July Redbook story, "Caution": "'Oh, Casper', she cried, 'How did it go?' His face told her. Little houses lined the levee, but he kissed her."

—Come on, Casper, keep your mind on your business.

A WOMAN CUSTOMER threw the men's head-gear department of a downtown store into a fluster the other day by asking for a set of earmuffs. There was no mistaking her request. She didn't care of what material or color, or how they attached. Yes, they were for herself. Several minor officials of related departments went into a quick huddle. The supplies on hand were ordered searched, but with no success. Then someone remembered having seen a pair stuck away with children's mittens in the stock room. The customer was more than satisfied, but the curiosity of the salesman was not.

"Would you mind telling me, madam," he asked, "Why you are interested in earmuffs this time of year?"

"My husband snores dreadfully at night," she began solemnly. "At home we sleep in separate bedrooms. But, you see, we are planning a trip to Europe this summer, and I am told we will probably have to share hotel rooms on the continent. I want the earmuffs to muffle."

WELL, the old home town has come of age in one respect: we've got ourselves a sidewalk cafe at last. All the pseudo-sophisticates who roll their eyes heavenward at the mere mention of Paree's Cafe de la Paix and New York's Chatham Walk can please keep quiet. Our curb-service restaurant has opened up where Whittier crosses Lindell, and where shops are set 40 feet back from the sidewalk so that there is ample space for tables and chairs. They are done in the best musical comedy tradition, red and white shaded by striped umbrellas. Most of the tables seat only two—which is also in the best musical comedy tradition.

Diners can sit and watch the world go by on the only avenue in town that approaches a promenade. For a pretense of privacy, however, flower boxes surround the court at

GIRL ABOUT TOWN

By Dorothy Coleman

SOME of these days we are going to incite a first-class rebellion against the tyranny of salespersons. Granted that they are in a better position to know about merchandise, still we think we're entitled to the final say-so as to the becomingness of a hat or the appropriateness of certain shoes.

A salesman flatly refused last week to sell us the pair of sandals we had our heart set on. We inadvertently had let drop the fact that they were to be worn with a bridesmaid's dress.

"Young lady," said he severely, "I can't conscientiously let you have those shoes. They are for house or beach wear, and wouldn't do at all for the purpose for which you intend them."

"But they won't show anyway under a long dress,"—our protests were feeble— "and they'd be much the most sensible thing I could get for parading down a church aisle and standing hours in a receiving line."

"That makes no difference. I happen to be the buyer in this department; I happen to know what I am talking about. Day in and day out I preach to my salesmen—'Sell the right shoe for the right wear.' I cannot subscribe to any compromise."

Always a little humble in the presence of authority, we gave in and took the others. Now if we wobble down that aisle and have to step clear out of our boots before the recessional, it's nobody's fault but that dreadful man's. He's probably a Fascist at heart, sold on the idea of the totalitarian state, in which everyone does as he's told.

Waitresses can be just as dictatorial. A friend of ours has reported a recent encounter with a strong-willed member of the sorority. Spring was in the air that day and as he looked over the menu nothing tempted him so much as a bowl of cucumber salad, cool and slippy.

Up spake he, "I'll have cucumber salad, please."

"You don't want that," came the peremptory reply. "That's got onions in it."

Probably if we weren't so stubborn, we would realize such advice was well-meant, and accept it gracefully, but, darn it, we hate to be bullied!

ZONA GALE writes in a July Redbook story, "Caution": "'Oh, Casper', she cried, 'How did it go?' His face told her. Little houses lined the levee, but he kissed her."

A WOMAN CUSTOMER threw the men's head-gear department of a downtown store into a fluster the other day by asking for a set of earmuffs. There was no mistaking her request. She didn't care of what material or color, or how they attached. Yes, they were for herself. Several minor officials of related departments went into a quick huddle. The supplies on hand were ordered searched, but with no success. Then someone remembered having seen a pair stuck away with children's mittens in the stock room. The customer was more than satisfied, but the curiosity of the salesman was not.

"Would you mind telling me, madam," he asked, "Why you are interested in earmuffs this time of year?"

"My husband snores dreadfully at night," she began solemnly. "At home we sleep in separate bedrooms. But, you see, we are planning a trip to Europe this summer, and I am told we will probably have to share hotel rooms on the continent. I want the earmuffs to muffle."

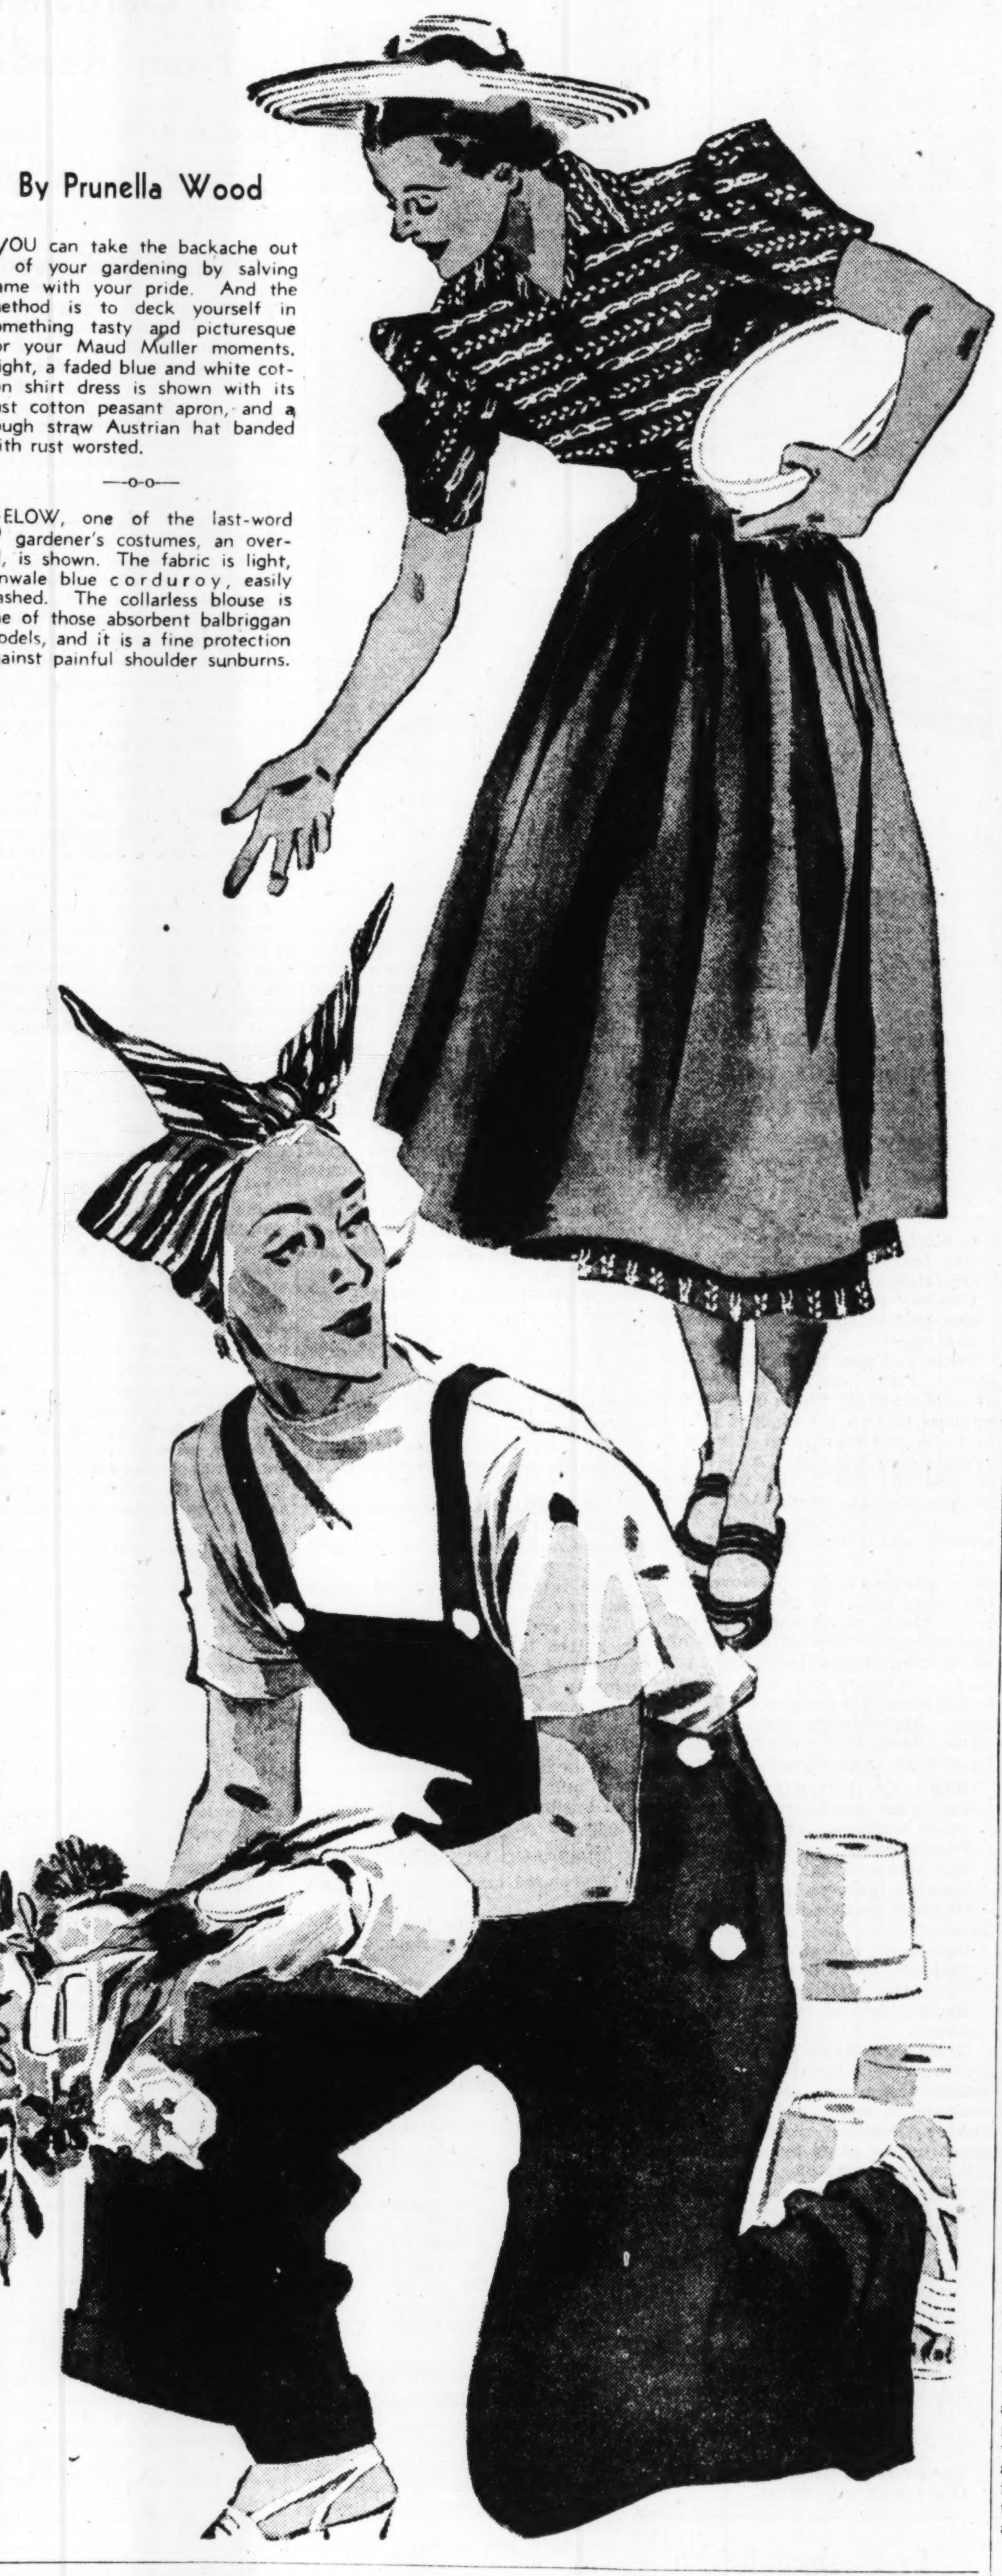
CLOSE-UP of ST. LOUIS FASHIONS

OUT IN THE GARDEN

By Prunella Wood



YOU can take the backache out of your gardening by salving same with your pride. And the method is to deck yourself in something tasty and picturesque for your Maud Muller moments. Right, a faded blue and white cotton shirt dress is shown with its rust cotton peasant apron, and a rough straw Austrian hat banded with rust worsted.

BELOW, one of the last-word gardener's costumes, an overall, is shown. The fabric is light, pinwale blue corduroy, easily washed. The collarless blouse is one of those absorbent balbriggan models, and it is a fine protection against painful shoulder sunburns.

A GIRL ABOUT TOWN

a discreet height from the ground. They are filled with trailing ferns, petunias and geraniums lend a distinctly festive air to the spot. Flower-filled urns are set among the tables and beside the booths. Oh, yes, booths—against the retaining wall of the high lawn next door west. They are a concession to the American drug store addicts. They are offset to some extent by the toniness of a canopy on the premises.

WE WOULDN'T dwell so on the details of this little spot if it were not so unusual a sight within the city limits. It is, in fact, the only sidewalk-cafe deserving the name that we have found in our rambles. The beaming proprietor, by name George Frangos, said his place was the only one east of Hanley road. Frangos has been in the restaurant business for 25 years, 15 on his own, since he came from Greece. This idea of a boulevard cafe like the ones on the continent has been a pet of his all those years. He has had a restaurant on Lindell and Whittier a little over a year now, but opened up his sidewalk annex only a week ago. It's probably a good idea to warn you that no alcoholic drinks are sold, not even 3.2 beer. Set-ups can be had.

Frangos still has a few decorative details to work out at Boulevard Cafe, Inc. Shall he, for instance, paint the concrete "floor"? He was inclining to deep maroon the other afternoon. When he can get permission from someone, he wants to break up all that concrete front and sod the place, almost out to the street. "Be much prettier."

He doesn't expect customers out of doors in the daytime, because it's too hot even under the beach umbrellas he has provided. Illuminating the place at night is no problem; the Neon sign at the curb and lights from inside are enough. "If you got too many lights you got bugs."

Latest in Necklaces

A THREE-STRAND necklace has triple the style of a single string of beads, according to the way the costume jewelry creators have summer fashions figured. Likewise three different colors offer a multiple of interest over the one shade.

If nautical themes are becoming, crystal beads which combine red, white and blue will display the wearer's style alertness. Navy, marine blue and rose are another popular trio, while black, white and gray offer a cool suggestion for the conservative woman. Bracelets usually may be obtained to match the necklaces.

Ornamentation Of Flowers on June Clothes

Nosegay Appears on Frock, Hat or Pocketbook—Sometimes Wrist.

THERE'S no costume so rare this June as one devoid of flower ornamentation. If there is no nosegay on the frock, then there is certain to be one on a hat, on a wrist or on a pocketbook.

Flowers grow in such profusion on summer ensembles that a waistline, a neckline or a head that isn't wreathed in gay posies must make up for their absence by floral designs of fabric or embroidered petals on sandals. No rule applies for the wearing of flowers except that these should be abundant and interestingly placed. Both daytime and evening modes adopt the theme and beach togs as well as other play togs find an excuse for the same sort of elaboration.

In the way of headgear, the vogue extends from raffia flower wreaths to wear with bathing suits to dainty violet or valley lily wreaths to complete evening costumes. Some of these more formal wreaths take the place of hats by circling the head at a jaunty angle and tying at the back with velvet or ribbon streamers. Roses, daisies and gardenias are other flowers that are used in this same manner.

WIDE-BRIMMED HATS of the picturesque type invariably call for flower trimming this summer, while more tailored models add tiny clusters of a conventional size and color. The crown of a capeline which is made entirely of flowers competes with the flower-basket shape having the top of the crown filled with variegated posies. Clusters or sprays of small petals likewise adorn as many hats as enormous roses and lilies used in solitary splendor.

In the choice of flowers for wear on a frock, plenty of latitude prevails. If the dress is of the shirtwaist variety, pin a tiny corsage to the collar. If there are lapels available on a coat or a frock, dress up one or both with a brilliant glow of petals. A spray of favorites may be tucked into the belt or worn on the front of a blouse in the conventional manner. Square-cut necklines of evening frocks use lilacs, daisies or cornflowers to give a finished appearance.

A garland of artificial flowers which resembles an abbreviated lei takes the place of a necklace, while the same idea is repeated as a bracelet. Bags that are made completely of flowers are featured for evening, while fiesta wreaths outline bags for daytime and trim hats of matching fabric or leather.

"HERE'S A NICE QUIET PLACE WHERE WE CAN TALK!"

It's the only place we can think of offhand where they would be out of tune. Otherwise they proved conclusively to us, how completely the well-dressed city tone is being carried off by tub frocks. A reddish tan, linen sports dress on the left used belt, buttons and scarf for white accent and, headware, we again noted the increasing use of turbans with sports things. White-striped navy trimmed the two-piece white frock on the right. A stiff navy felt saucer radiated widely, minus a crown.

Woman Columnist Writes A Tribute to Her Father

By Elsie Robinson.

HIS suit was always old.

Strange, that in all the 21 years I knew him, my father never seemed to have a new suit. Always that same, shapeless, dark affair, worn shiny at the seams. Worn and old as he was.

Yet he wasn't really old! It still startles me afresh to realize that he died when he was my present age . . . feeling as young and eager inside as I feel today!

Now—when it's too late to help—I realize how he must have hated it all . . . the dreariness, the monotonous grind, the shabbiness. Long after, my mother told me that he'd been a great dandy when they married—she as pretty as a rose in her flaring flounces . . . he in the broad-shouldered, tight-waisted elegance of a new suit with "skin tight britches," the first in town.

"A great one he was for fighting and jigging," she beamed—her faded eyes calling to him across the long years.

How casual her voice was! But to me it came with a shock—the thought of that gay, reckless lad whom I had never seen. Why, he must have been only a boy when he put it all away—the fun and the fine feathers—and began a poor man's desperate fight to give his children a break! Just a boy, filled with fire and laughter and great gallant rages against meanness and hypocrisy!

—o-o—

TREMENDOUS THINGS were a-doing in that pioneer California. Unions were forming—a new labor world was in the making . . . and his Irish blood must have burned to be in the thick of it. But there were the five of us young things—shooting out of our clothes, bursting out of our boots. And, pressing harder than the need of food, was that hunger for "learnin'." Books—how he'd pounce on any chance bit of good reading; throw himself, headlong, into a lusty debate. Education—he'd been denied it in his own hard-driven existence—but his children must have what he lacked!

So, he'd put his youth away and bent his neck to the load. And never was I to see him young or carefree. Even in my first memories he was bent and shabby, with the cough that was to be his death clawing at every breath he drew. But always the fire was in his tortured eyes . . . and the pity in his scarred hands.

Never was a man friendlier. Not just love. Something deeper. Understanding—like a steadying hand. Still I can feel his arm, walling my sobbing fright . . . and the warmth of his faded coat beneath my tear-stained cheek.

Friendly to strangers, too. Railroad men on strike. Prospectors, cowboys, stevedores, stranded on alien trails. So little to give! Only such simple fare as we had ourselves—mush, boiled beef and beans, thick slabs of home-made bread. But with each plate he gave—himself.

And always, as long as he lived, they came and went at our door—the hungry, the frightened and weak; the angry, the hunted and hurt.

Then, suddenly, he was gone. A gasp . . . a strange, bright calm . . . and they led my mother away. What had he seen, they wondered, to wrap him in such peace? As if, at the end, God had given him that fine new suit he'd always wanted—and set him free on that adventure he'd always craved.

Alex Robinson—just another Dad. Just another father who put his youth away—gave up his dreams and adventures—that his children might be served.

Just Dad—who did his shifts without medals—shabby, unnoticed and poor. Yet Who was it that said: "Greater love hath no man than this—that a man lay down his life for his friends?" And so I'm thinking—

Perhaps, when the story is ended . . . and the heroes have strutted their stuff . . . God may lift up His shiniest halo and remark to the crowd, "That's enough. You have hung up a wonderful record . . . and, as umpire, I'm certainly glad . . . but, considering all of the risks, boys, I'm saving first prize for—"JUST DAD!"

Clean Slip-Covers

Washable covers are often allowed to stay on the various pieces of furniture a little too long unless some system is used in regard to changing them. Every other week is usually satisfactory and one housewife solves both the problem of changing and the laundry problem by changing the first-floor covers one week and the second floor the alternate week. It does not mean so many in the laundry at one time and yet keeps the covers fresh and clean.

New Towel in Sun

The bathroom towel no longer gets an opportunity to flaunt its colors on the beach. Its place in the sun has been usurped by a swanky sports towel that is brilliant of color and often pictures amusing designs. Figures that are almost life size decorate some of this season's most striking beach towels while multiple stripes and plaids decorate others. More conservative towels that are sufficiently large to be used as lounging rugs match beach togs in color and are the envy of the crowd when they display huge monograms.

Achieving Golden Glow

The peaches and cream complexion has become such a vogue that the creators of cosmetics have been thinking fast to compete with summer tan. One manufacturer thinks he has solved the problem by recommending regulation peach-colored face powder applied over an olive-toned protective cream. The result is a healthy golden glow.

The Homemaker's Page

LET ME SUGGEST

by Josephine Walter

THERE is one room in most houses that is sadly neglected and due for a little attention, and that is the sleeping porch. In fact, rooms of this type have gotten the bad end of the furnishing deal for so long that I think they should organize a union and ask for better decorations. Their slogan might be 'no free air without some fancy fixins."

And it is not only the aesthetic side of sleeping porches which needs improvement, either; the sleeping equipment would often shock an Arkansas hillbilly. I know many a case of achy bones which has been attributed to an incipient attack of grippe which could be directly traced to the first few nights spent on a porch bed. Somehow, people get the idea that sleeping on a porch is similar to camping out, forgetting that they are apt to spend at least three or four months out of the year trying to get comfort sleeping outdoors. So, first of all, see that you have good, sound sleeping equipment instead of using all the cast-offs that can no longer do duty in the rest of the house.

Then concentrate on the eye appeal and comfort accessories that will make the most scorching night more bearable. No reason, first of all, why this ugly duckling isn't entitled to a little paint. Why not paint the ceiling that lovely, pale turquoise color that is used so frequently on the porches of Southern Colonial houses? Light colored walls are always acceptable, but why not, for a change, try painting them deep blue or chocolate brown? You will be surprised how this deadens the glare of the early morning sun.

—o-o—

While you are wielding the paint brush, see that the bed is given a coat of paint and freshened up. A bed on an open porch is apt to be of iron, but you will find that a coat of coral or lime yellow paint will take away any suggestion of a hospital. On the other hand, you might slipcover the head and foot boards in some washable material that will stand a good soaking on occasion.

● As to bed-spreads, to be practical, they must, naturally, be waterproof to protect the mattresses from a driving rain but this does not mean that they have to be a piece of canvas slung over the bed. They may be of canvas, of course, but they can be made to fit the bed well and trimmed with rickrack or a washable fringe edging. On the other hand, there are a number of new water repellent materials on the market, used for shower curtains and such things, which would also make attractive spreads.

Protective awnings or blinds of some type are also a help, not only in protecting the beds from the weather, and shielding you from neighboring on-lookers, but also in keeping out the early morning sun. Of course, you will have to waken early in the morning to let them down unless you can think of some Rube Goldberg type of contraption that will make them automatically descend when the sun shines on them. And a few scatter rugs of the washable type will be a great help when you step out onto the dew drenched floor, especially if you aren't a slipper user.

—o-o—

If you are a "reader in bedder" you will undoubtedly want some type of lighting equipment by the bed, so be sure and put in some wall sockets if you are building. You can have them put in at small cost even if your room is already built. I think the tiny reading lamps that clamp onto a book are the best for sleeping-porch reading for they give a very concentrated light and do not attract as many bugs. And be sure to have a spray gun with a death dealing fluid close at hand so you can "Quick Henry the Flit" when necessary. Another bug demolisher now on the market works by electricity and attracts the bugs and then mercilessly electrocutes them.

● AND HERE are a few final suggestions for sleeping porch comfort. Have a light blanket some place at hand for those sudden chills which occasionally occur, even in a St. Louis summer. A blanket box under the bed is a grand idea so that you don't have the blanket kicking around your feet on hot nights when you don't know what to do with it. And be sure and hav a standing ash tray or a small bedside table with smoking equipment if there is any member of your family who must have a good night cigarette.

QUESTION: I have a bridge lamp with shell lamp shade, made in sections held together with leaded glass. Originally there was a light brown wash on this shade which prevented the light from glaring through but when I washed it this finish came off. Can you tell me what sort of wash is put on shades of this kind, and how I could make it?

D. W.

Use regular starch, mixed to a thin, watery consistency and then mix in dry brown color to the shade desired. Coat in a section at a time and use a wad of cotton to pat it on to make the surface uniform. A coat of clear lacquer or varnish will preserve it and keep the finish from washing off again.

MUSHROOM Takes a Bow

Favorite of Gourmets World Over, It Is One of Little Known and Less Understood Foods.

By Frederika Borchard.

ABOVE — CHICKEN AND MUSHROOM WITH EGG AND SHERRY SAUCE.

IRONICALLY enough, the mushroom, which is found in the temperate regions of practically every country in the world, is one of the little known and less understood foods. Generations ago, when open mushroom-dotted country stretched beyond almost every doorway, the majority of people feared the fungus because of the difficulty in distinguishing between the poisonous and the edible species. Later, when the commercially grown mushroom supplanted its wild relatives, the price was so high, due to slow transportation and rapid deterioration, as to prohibit its use in the average home. Only recently scientific cultivation, quantity production and modern transportation have removed these barriers. And suddenly we discover that, despite high food value, moderate cost and easy accessibility, the known methods of preparing the delicious mushroom are comparatively few. And no food, whatever its virtues, can long survive monotony of preparation.

The following recipes, some entirely new, some adaptations of old recipes, offer variety, appeal and sophistication, as well as concentrated food value.

MUSHROOM SHERRY BISQUE

Three tablespoons butter.
Three tablespoons flour.
One-fourth teaspoon dry mustard.
One teaspoon salt.
One-fourth teaspoon pepper.
One-eighth teaspoon baking soda.
Three cups boiling water.
Three-fourths pound mushrooms.
One-fourth cup sherry.
One cup heavy cream, whipped.
Paprika.

Melt two tablespoons butter. Blend in flour. Add seasonings and baking soda. Add water. Remove stems from mushrooms. Wash and chop. Add to first mixture. Cover and simmer for 30 minutes. Strain. Peel and slice mushroom caps and saute in remaining tablespoon fat.

Place in top part of double boiler. Add strained mushroom liquor, and cook over hot water 10 minutes. Add sherry slowly. Place in serving bowls, and top each portion with whipped cream flavored with paprika. Approximate yield: Six portions. If desired sprinkle cream liberally with thinly sliced unsalted pistachio nuts. The whipped cream may be further flavored with a dash of bitters if desired. Should pistachio nuts not be obtainable, blanched shredded almonds may be substituted. However, the soft green adds an attractive note.

COLD HORS D'OEUVRES

Wash and peel very small mushrooms, or use canned mushrooms. Remove the stems and soak in sherry wine for several hours. Drain, fill cups with highly spiced fillings: lobster paste, roquefort cheese, caviar, etc. Stick a toothpick into each cup, or omit the toothpick and serve on tiny rounds of anchovy buttered crackers.

MUSHROOM AND CARROT BALLS

Deviled crab.
One bunch large carrots.
One-fourth cup butter
Two cups canned mushroom caps
One small onion, minced
One-half teaspoon salt
One-eighth teaspoon pepper
Three-fourth cup water, drained from carrots
Two tablespoons flour
One-fourth teaspoon dry mustard
One-half teaspoon sugar
One-half teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Wash and scrape carrots. Cook in rapidly boiling salted water until almost tender. Remove from water. When cool enough to handle, cut round balls with a vegetable scoop. Melt two tablespoons butter. Saute mushroom caps, add carrot balls, onion, salt and pepper. Add three-fourths cup carrot water and simmer until carrots are tender. Melt remaining butter. Blend in flour and seasonings. Add one cup water, and let cook until thickened. Add to carrot and mushroom mixture and cook until thick and smooth. Add Worcestershire. Approximate yield: Six portions. Garnish with chopped parsley.

MUSHROOMS STUFFED WITH DEVILED CRAB

Twelve large mushrooms
One can (6½-ounce) crabmeat
One medium-sized onion, minced
One-third cup butter
One-fourth cup dry breadcrumbs.
One-half cup heavy cream
One-fourth cup milk
One teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
One-third cup ketchup
One teaspoon dry mustard
One-eighth teaspoon pepper
One-half teaspoon salt
One-half teaspoon celery salt
One egg

Wash and peel mushrooms. Chop stems. Flake crabmeat, removing all stiff tendons. Saute onion a few minutes in two tablespoons butter. Add chopped mushroom stems and simmer five minutes. Add breadcrumbs and stir lightly until butter has been absorbed. Add cream, milk and seasonings, and stir until smooth and thick. Add crabmeat and cook, stirring very lightly, three minutes more. Remove from fire. Add egg. Stir thoroughly and cool. Heap mushroom caps with this mixture. Top with small bits of butter. Place in baking pan. Add one-fourth cup water. Bake in hot oven (375 degrees F.) 20 minutes. Approximate yield, six portions. Serve on rounds of buttered toast with crisp cheese crackers.

MUSHROOM POTATO PANCAKES

Two cups grated raw potatoes.
Three tablespoons heavy cream.
One medium sized onion, grated.
One teaspoon salt.
Quarter teaspoon pepper.
One-half teaspoon Worcestershire sauce.
One-fourth cup sifted flour.
Two teaspoons baking powder.
Two eggs, well beaten.
One-half pound mushrooms, chopped.

Grate potatoes on a coarse grater. Drain off one-fourth cup potato liquid; add cream. Add onion and seasonings, and flour sifted with baking powder. Add eggs and mushrooms. Drop by spoonfuls on hot greased griddle, turning to brown both sides. Approximate yield, two dozen cakes.

TOMATOES STUFFED WITH MUSHROOM AND CORN

Six large firm tomatoes.
One-half teaspoon salt.
One teaspoon chopped onion.
One-fourth cup butter.
One green pepper, finely chopped.
One-half pound mushrooms.
One-half teaspoon Worcestershire sauce.
Four tablespoons dry breadcrumbs.
One-fourth teaspoon dry mustard.
One-fourth cup water.
One cup corn kernels.
One teaspoon salt.
One-eighth teaspoon pepper.
One-fourth teaspoon celery salt.
One egg, well beaten.

Wash tomatoes. Remove tops and scoop out centers. Sprinkle with salt. Saute onion in two tablespoons butter. Add green pepper and mushrooms, peeled and broken. Add Worcestershire sauce, breadcrumbs, dry mustard, water and tomato pulp. Cover and simmer five minutes. Add to remaining ingredients. Stuff tomatoes. Bake in moderate oven (375 degrees F.) 20 minutes, or until tomatoes are tender. Approximate yield: six portions.

For a Sunday night supper, this mushroom and cheese casserole is a happy choice. Serve a green salad with it.

MUSHROOM AND CHEESE CASSEROLE

One and one-half pounds medium-sized mushrooms.
Two tablespoons butter.
One cup highly-seasoned medium white sauce.
One tablespoon chopped chives.
Two tablespoons pimento, cut in strips.
One tablespoon pimento liquor.
One tablespoon chopped mint.
One-fourth teaspoon dry mustard.
One cup grated cheese.
Two tablespoons buttered breadcrumbs.

Wash and peel mushrooms. Saute in butter 10 minutes. Add white sauce and chives. Cook slowly two minutes longer. Add all other ingredients except cheese and breadcrumbs. Turn into casserole. Sprinkle with cheese and breadcrumbs. Bake in hot oven (375 degrees F.) 30 minutes or until cheese bubbles and begins to brown. Approximate yield: six portions.

SHRIMP AND MUSHROOM BALLS

One pound medium-sized mushrooms.
Three tablespoons butter.
Three tablespoons flour.
One cup milk.
One-half teaspoon salt.
One-eighth teaspoon pepper.
One-fourth teaspoon dry mustard.
One-fourth teaspoon onion juice.
One egg.
One can (6 ounce) shrimp.

Peel and stem mushrooms. Make a cream sauce of butter, flour and milk. Add seasonings. Add to egg. Beat well. Add shrimp, cleaned and mashed. Fill mushroom caps with this mixture. Put them together, two by two. Cover the balls with shrimp paste. Roll in fine cracker crumbs. Place on wax paper, and chill in refrigerator. Fry in deep fat (380 degrees F.) until golden brown. Approximate yield: six portions.

CHICKEN AND MUSHROOM WITH EGG AND SHERRY SAUCE

Two hard cooked eggs.
One egg.
Three tablespoons butter.
Two cups mushroom caps.
Two cups cubed cold cooked chicken.
One-half cup chicken stock or gravy.
Two tablespoons flour.
One-half teaspoon salt.
One-eighth teaspoon pepper.
One-fourth teaspoon celery salt.
Two tablespoons chopped chives.

Press yolks of hard cooked eggs through a sieve. Add dash of salt and pepper, and enough of the raw egg to make a thick paste. Form into small balls, roll in a little flour and saute until light brown in one tablespoon of the butter. Saute mushrooms in remaining butter for five minutes. Add chicken cubes and two tablespoons of stock, and simmer five minutes longer. Thicken remainder of stock with flour mixed with remaining butter and turn over chicken mixture. When smooth and well blended, add chopped chives and sherry, a little at a time, taking care it does not boil. Remove from fire. Add remainder of raw egg, stir for a minute and pour into serving dish. Garnish with egg balls and hard cooked egg whites, put through a ricer. Approximate yield, six portions.

MISTAKES IN DECORATION

By Elizabeth Boykin

ELEANOR L. is worried to death about her living room . . . she's just had it all done over fresh and new, and now finds that the whole effect is disappointing.

"The room looks jittery and jumpy when I had so hoped for it to seem peaceful and lovely. Is there anything I can do about it now?" she writes.

Here is the situation — the walls are cream color and the rug is an American Oriental in blues and reds. Draperies and sofa are in a flat weave printed mohair with a blue ground and a dramatic natural floral pattern. Two chairs are in a floral linen with a natural ground and another chair has a striped material with red predominating. The furniture is mahogany in Williamsburg style reproductions, good pieces all, and they should be a part of a really beautifully serene room.

Since Eleanor L. has already spent the money she had for refurnishing, her problem now is to correct mistakes as inexpensively as possible. She can make slip covers herself if the material doesn't cost much, but can't afford to make any more errors.

The trouble with the room now is that it has too much pattern and the furniture is a little too large in scale for the size of the room. The rug, of course, can't be changed, but the draperies and furniture coverings had better be replaced eventually. For the windows here, sheer curtains in cream, beautifully made with pinch pleated headings, would be better than draperies. Then a slip cover for the sofa in plain delft blue — one chair in deep biege and two chairs in a lighter-than-delft blue. These colors will tend to make the room more tranquil.

We suggested that she eliminate a good many of her little ornaments and gadgets, retaining for accessories only a pair of pale blue Wedgewood urns and her Sheffield tea set, lamps with cream pottery bases and cream shades. For accent, flowers in fine deep red tones and the warm colors in her book bindings.

Questions of Timely Interest to St. Louisans Are Up for Discussion.

By Harriet W. Chandler

QUESTION: I have beautiful roses and am anxious to know how to start more from cuttings. Will you give me this information?

M. H.

Just now is an ideal time to make green cuttings. Select a vigorous shoot and cut in six-inch lengths, leaving a five-parted leaf at the top of each cutting. Such leaves manufacture more food than smaller ones with only three leaflets. Insert, cutting down about two-thirds its length in any good garden soil, in the shade. Water and cover with a mason jar to retain the moisture. When growth is such that the cutting reaches the top of the jar the covering can be removed. Protect over winter with brush. By spring the small plants can be removed to their permanent places.

—o-o—

QUESTION: Will you please publish a good liquid manure that can be made out of chemicals, for fertilizing roses and how often to use it.

E. F. D.

A good chemical liquid fertilizer is made of one heaping teaspoonful of nitrate of soda, one tablespoon of superphosphate (also called acid phosphate) to a gallon of water. Use a pint of this solution on each plant about every two weeks until September.

—o-o—

QUESTION: Can you tell me what to do when peonies don't bloom? The buds get the size of a large pea, then dry up. C. W.

If there is any black on the stems and perhaps a leaf withering, wait until July and dig up your peonies to see if the plants have black rot. If so, cut away all the blackened parts and disinfect the good part of the root left with a strong solution of permanganate of potash and plant in soil that is two-thirds screened coal ashes and one-third yellow clay. This will cure them and in a couple of years they can be put back into the garden. If there is no sign of disease at the root, your peonies may be planted too deep, or perhaps the soil they are in is exhausted. Try transplanting them in September into good garden loam where there is fine drainage and plenty of sunshine. In planting do not let the buds be deeper than two inches below the surface of the soil and if they try to bloom the first year after moving cut away the buds so all strength can go to building up a good root system.

QUESTION: How can I rid my lawn of plantain? I have too extensive a place to dig it all up so I am anxious to know if there is any other way.

DR. D.

For broad-leafed weeds such as plantain, sprinkle with a solution of iron sulphide, one and a half pounds to a gallon of water, over an area of about 60 square feet. The iron sulphide, commonly called copperas, must be dissolved in warm water and an old container should be used, as it will soon rust out. The weeds will turn black and die, but while the grass may blacken, too, the chemical will run off the narrow erect leaves before it has done the tissues any permanent injury and the grass will grow again.

—o-o—

QUESTION: My daffodil and tulip leaves have become unsightly. When can I cut them back?

M. C. J.

Do not cut the leaves of either the tulips or daffodils until they have yellowed and fallen over. It is the leaves that manufacture the food which goes to build up the bulb for another's year bloom.

—o-o—

QUESTION: A climbing rose I have growing on a trellis is just covered with buds, but the whole plant looks grayish as if powdered. Can you tell me what is the matter and if anything can be done about it?

Your rose is mildewed as lots of others will be after this wet season. Dust the plant thoroughly with dusting sulphur in the morning while the dew is still on the leaves. The sun will vaporize the sulphur and kill the spores of mildew. Without sunshine the sulphur is not effective. Bordeaux mixture is also used as a spray for mildew.

Blackberry Shortcake

One quart fresh or frozen blackberries.
One cup sugar.
One-half cup water.
One teaspoon lemon juice.
One-half pint heavy cream.
Six drop biscuit shortcakes.

Wash berries. Combine sugar and water. Bring to boiling point. Boil three minutes. Add berries Boil three minutes longer. Chill. Add lemon juice. Whip cream and sweeten to taste. Split warm shortcakes. Spread with cream, put berries between and on top of layers. Garnish with cream. Approximate yield: Six portions.

SAUCE SECRETS

A SMOOTH, BLENDED CREAM SAUCE IS USUALLY WELL RECEIVED BY THE ENTIRE FAMILY.

GRAVY is a sauce for meat, fish or vegetables. It can be just juice, as meat drippings, which is ordinarilly called dish gravy, or it can be lemon juice or melted butter, with onion or capers or other finely-chopped pungent seasonings. These sauces are not worries. But the thickened sauce often makes meat cookery a complicated and troublesome thing. It is the first step beyond the plain cookery processes of boiling, warming and roasting and the result can no longer depend entirely on the heat of the oven, or the amount of water used in cooking. A little skill is required, a little patience, and a little practice.

Every woman who cooks should have in her head a background of proportions for gravy making. This can save her a deal of trouble because when it is time to make gravy, there is no time and no place for a cookbook. The recipe for medium white sauce is the basis of all gravies. A thickened gravy is merely a thickened liquid, and the liquid can be milk, broth, water, meat drippings, or a combination of these.

MEDIUM WHITE SAUCE

Four tablespoons butter.
Four tablespoons flour.
Two cups milk.
One-half teaspoon salt.
Dash of pepper.

Place the butter in a saucepan, and melt it over a low heat, being careful not to let it brown. Add the flour, and blend well stirring until the mixture looks smooth and thick, and begins to bubble. Then add the milk, stir well and cook over moderate heat until the mixture begins to thicken. Turn heat to low, and let simmer for five minutes. Add the salt and pepper.

As the name says this is a medium thick sauce, about the consistency of heavy cream. It is used for gravies, creaming potatoes or meat, or scalloped dishes. Whenever a recipe says "Serve with medium cream sauce or white sauce," these proportions, that is, four tablespoons fat, the same of flour, are used to two cups of milk, always. It is understood, the same as O. K. means all right. The yield is approximately two cups sauce.

THERE is no particular secret to keeping the sauce smooth and evenly thickened. Follow the directions, and become accustomed to really measuring. Blend the flour well with the fat before adding the liquid. And then cook slowly until the liquid has thickened.

If a thin white sauce is needed, for soups for instance, cut the amount of flour and butter in half. Use two tablespoons butter and two tablespoons flour to two cups milk instead of four. Make it the same way, just as carefully and cook it just as long. If you need to add more butter for flavor, or to make the soup richer in calories, beat it in just before serving, but do not try to add it at first, when blending the flour and fat together.

A heavy white sauce, a sauce that is really a paste when cold, and can be used for croquettes, souffles, etc., calls for eight tablespoons or one-half cup, flour to a like amount of fat for two cups milk. Make the sauce the same way as the standard recipe, but stir more carefully during the five minutes cooking, as the mixture thickens rapidly.

The standard recipe can be cut in half very easily, or in fourths, for that matter, and it often is necessary to do this if you are cooking for two, or one, or if you need just a bit of cream sauce to freshen up a little leftover food. But no matter how small the amount make it just as carefully as if the whole recipe were being prepared. In this way a pattern of gravy making will be established, and a very vital part of the technique background all cooks find necessary will be yours forever.

It is a simple thing to vary the medium white sauce. Add a hard cooked egg, chopped and a bit of chopped parsley, and the result is as nice a sauce for boiled fish as you can imagine.

Add the hot sauce slowly to a slightly beaten egg yolk, mixing well, add a tablespoon or two of horseradish and serve on broiled corned beef hash, or meat patties.

Add a half pint of cleaned canned shrimps, add a tablespoon of white wine for a most pleasing sauce for poached haddock.

Now for meat gravies, made of meat drippings, seasonings and water.

The recipe pattern is the same as the one we set up for white sauce, and the directions for making it exactly the same. But there are a couple of flavoring tricks it might be worth while learning. Thickened meat gravy is a good extender. It carries meat flavor to potatoes and bread, has good color and a reputation as fine as any long established favorite food.

MEAT GRAVY

Four tablespoons fat, or grease from meat drippings.
Four tablespoons flour.
Two cup boiling water or meat drippings.
Seasoning.

Remove meat from roasting pan. Turn drippings into bowl, and let stand a minute or two to let grease rise to the top. Measure four tablespoons grease; turn off remaining fat, but save the drippings. Place grease in saucepan, add flour and blend well. Rinse roasting pan wiht one cup boiling water to dissolve the brown sediment which will give flavor and color to the gravy. Add meat drippings to this, and add enough more water to make amount up to two cups. Add this liquid to flour-fat mixture, and blend well. Add salt, pepper, a bay leaf or a bit of thyme or marjoram, as desired. Let simmer, stirring occasionally, five minutes. Add a little kitchen bouquet or other commercial gravy seasoning, if a darker color is needed. Then strain, to remove seasonings, and any bits of bone or skin that might have come from the roasting pan. Serve very hot.

This will make a very nice smooth brown gravy. It will not be too thick, and it will not be greasy, because the flour and fat have both been measured.

A greasy gravy often is the result of making the gravy in the roasting pan itself, guessing at the amount of flour to the amount of fat, and then adding enough water to give the consistency desired. The desired consistency is never reached unless the amount of flour and fat is balanced to start with. In making the gravy in the roasting pan itself, there is a temptation to keep juggling the amount of flour and water until the whole kitchen is filled with gravy, pale brown and sticky, and no flavor at all.

Make use of the gravy pattern established in making a white sauce, and meat gravy will always be of the consistency of heavy cream, good to the sight, the smell and the taste.

In the matter of seasonings for gravy, you can add a touch of sophistication very easily. For meat gravies, the ever faithful Worcestershire adds a nice fillip, but don't forget some of the newcomers—the mushroom and walnut ketchups, the onion and garlic juices, the herbal extracts of parsley and celery.

Crisp, Green Salad

THE ingredients for crisp, green salad are: One medium head iceberg lettuce, two medium cucumbers, chilled, and one green pepper.

Wash lettuce thoroughly, remove core, and run water down center. Drain and chill to crisp. Pare cucumbers, marking sides with lines to produce fluted edge if desired. Slice medium thin. Wash pepper, remove seeds and core, and cut in rings or strips. Line salad bowl with outside leaves of lettuce. Break rest of head apart, combine with cucumbers and pepper, and turn into bowl. Pour Roquefort dressing over them. Yield: Four to six servings.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

NEW YORK, June 19.

WELL, the Battle of Murray Hill is over, and we Hillbillies have settled down into our usual summer ruts. The battle was a perfect illustration of the horrors of living in each other's pockets as we cliff-dwellers do in midtown Manhattan, except that it reached a pitch of violence few of us attain.

A couple of blocks from my pueblo a young importer named Appleton dwells in an apartment looking down on a terrace garden occupied by Mrs. Lorelle O'Hara, who sells real estate. Not long ago, according to the record, Mrs. O'Hara gave a jolly party on her terrace, and as the long evening wore on, Brother Appleton, courting shut-eye, grew irked at the racket from below. Harsh words availing naught, he gently poured a pail of water over the hostess from his boudoir window. She is said to have retaliated by wafting a few flowers at him—forgetting, in the heat of the moment, to remove them from pots. Haled to court by outraged constables from our neighborhood bastile on Thirty-fifth street, both were convicted of disorderly conduct. However, both cooled off, Mrs. O'Hara decided to move on July 1, and both withdrew their charges. Peace reigned on Thirty-sixth street.

—o-o—

This was a natural outburst in a situation that afflicts us all. Once the several hundred windows surrounding my courtyard are open for the summer, horror stalks abroad. It's nothing, around here, to have some unknown neighbor shriek, at 1 a. m., "Shut off that so-and-so radio!" (Not at me!) A yowling baby can keep a thousand people awake! Small wonder that our nerves scream when it gets hot and humid, and that occasionally some tortured soul, driven far past endurance, tosses potted posies at a tormenter!

● DID YOU READ about our celebrated case of Silent Treatment? The pretty Mrs. Helen Blakeslee, wife of a noted local nerve specialist, charged that her medical spouse didn't say one single word to her for seven whole years—an incredible feat, I should think, even for a tight-lipped man of science. But that's what Helen says, right out in court. And it all started when the wife approved of her 16-year-old daughter's using lip-goo! My good gosh, is that anything to shut up about for seven years? Not these days, my dear old Doc Blakeslee!

The scribbling on scarfs rages on. It is said to have begun in Italy in '36, when some inspired genius printed one of Il Duce's fiery orations on a scarf. The notion spread to our shores, and now the Declaration of Independence or part of the Constitution may be had on neck-cloths. And now Coco Chanel, in Paris, is doing "The Marseillaise" and "God Save the King" on 'em!

● LAST WEEK-END Grace Moore visited Lily Pons up at Silvermine, Conn., and the two pretty and costly canaries had a fine time gabbing and comparing their High C's. As a memento of the visit, Grace sent Lily a young blue spruce tree for the estate. Pons, thrilled, got a small bronze plate for it with Moore's name, and the date—thus beginning what she calls her "Autograph Grove," and which well might start a national fancy.

THE BARMEN around town, I find, have been trying out this "Wallis Cocktail" which the Duke of Windsor is said to have shaken up in honor of his bride—and I am sorry to say that most of them tell me it is, in their own word, "lousy." It's a mixture of cointreau, gin, peppermint, lemon juice, soda and ice. My friend, Nick, of the St. Moritz, says the peppermint puts the cuss on the tipple—and without it the drink would be a mere "sidecar," that tasty but sinister drink invented during prohibition to tickle feminine palates. Oh, well, try again, Eddie, old Bridegroom!

I went to the Versailles nightspot the other night to witness the floor debut of Patricia Bowman, the prettiest toe-dancer ever born and bred in the nation's Capital. Patsy was lovely, and went like a breeze. And I noted at a ringside table the big baritone, Everett Marshall, once Pat's most devoted suitor! But I'll bet Patsy missed the presence of the late Roxy, her discoverer and mentor for years!

IT SEEMS TO ME that bathing-caps have always been among the most hideous blights on any beach landscape. They've made the wearers, no matter how pretty and shapely, look like skinned bunnies. Now I find that a new line of bathing caps is being styled just like millinery, which I think is a thumping fine idea. I've seen three types—turban, down-on-the-forehead, and one with an off-center point—for various styles of faces. This is the best move toward further sand-beautification I've noted in years, and we should be grateful!

A greasy gravy often is the result of making the gravy in the roasting pan itself, guessing at the amount of flour to the amount of fat, and then adding enough water to give the consistency desired. The desired consistency is never reached unless the amount of flour and fat is balanced to start with. In making the gravy in the roasting pan itself, there is a temptation to keep juggling the amount of flour and water until the whole kitchen is filled with gravy, pale brown and sticky, and no flavor at all.

Make use of the gravy pattern established in making a white sauce, and meat gravy will always be of the consistency of heavy cream, good to the sight, the smell and the taste.

In the matter of seasonings for gravy, you can add a touch of sophistication very easily. For meat gravies, the ever faithful Worcestershire adds a nice fillip, but don't forget some of the newcomers—the mushroom and walnut ketchups, the onion and garlic juices, the herbal extracts of parsley and celery.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

NEW YORK, June 19.

WELL, the Battle of Murray Hill is over, and we Hillbillies have settled down into our usual summer ruts. The battle was a perfect illustration of the horrors of living in each other's pockets as we cliff-dwellers do in midtown Manhattan, except that it reached a pitch of violence few of us attain.

A couple of blocks from my pueblo a young importer named Appleton dwells in an apartment looking down on a terrace garden occupied by Mrs. Lorelle O'Hara, who sells real estate. Not long ago, according to the record, Mrs. O'Hara gave a jolly party on her terrace, and as the long evening wore on, Brother Appleton, courting shuteye, grew irked at the racket from below. Harsh words availing naught, he gently poured a pail of water over the hostess from his boudoir window. She is said to have retaliated by wafting a few flowers at him—forgetting, in the heat of the moment, to remove them from pots. Haled to court by outraged constables from our neighborhood bastile on Thirty-fifth street, both were convicted of disorderly conduct. However, both cooled off, Mrs. O'Hara decided to move on July 1, and both withdrew their charges. Peace reigned on Thirty-sixth street.

This was a natural outburst in a situation that afflicts us all. Once the several hundred windows surrounding my courtyard are open for the summer, horror stalks abroad. It's nothing, around here, to have some unknown neighbor shriek, at 1 a. m., "Shut off that so-and-so radio!" (Not at me!) A yowling baby can keep a thousand people awake! Small wonder that our nerves scream when it gets hot and humid, and that occasionally some tortured soul, driven far past endurance, tosses potted posies at a tormenter!

●DID YOU READ about our celebrated case of Silent Treatment? The pretty Mrs. Helen Blakeslee, wife of a noted local nerve specialist, charged that her medical spouse didn't say one single word to her for seven whole years—an incredible feat, I should think, even for a tight-lipped man of science. But that's what Helen says, right out in court. And it all started when the wife approved of her 16-year-old daughter's using lip-goo! My good gosh, is that anything to shut up about for seven years? Not these days, my dear old Doc Blakeslee!

The scribbling on scarfs rages on. It is said to have begun in Italy in '36, when some inspired genius printed one of Il Duce's fiery orations on a scarf. The notion spread to our shores, and now the Declaration of Independence or part of the Constitution may be had on neck-cloths. And now Coco Chanel, in Paris, is doing "The Marseillaise" and "God Save the King" on 'em!

●LAST WEEK-END Grace Moore visited Lily Pons up at Silvermine, Conn., and the two pretty and costly canaries had a fine time gabbing and comparing their High C's. As a memento of the visit, Grace sent Lily a young blue spruce tree for the estate. Pons, thrilled, got a small bronze plate for it with Moore's name, and the date—thus beginning what she calls her "Autograph Grove," and which well might start a national fancy.

THE BARMEN around town, I find, have been trying out this "Wallis Cocktail" which the Duke of Windsor is said to have shaken up in honor of his bride—and I am sorry to say that most of them tell me it is, in their own word, "lousy." It's a mixture of cointreau, gin, peppermint, lemon juice, soda and ice. My friend, Nick, of the St. Moritz, says the peppermint puts the cuss on the tipple—and without it the drink would be a mere "sidecar," that tasty but sinister drink invented during prohibition to tickle feminine palates. Oh, well, try again, Eddie, old Bridegroom!

I went to the Versailles nightspot the other night to witness the floor debut of Patricia Bowman, the prettiest toe-dancer ever born and bred in the nation's Capital. Patsy was lovely, and went like a breeze. And I noted at a ringside table the big baritone, Everett Marshall, once Pat's most devoted suitor! But I'll bet Patsy missed the presence of the late Roxy, her discoverer and mentor for years!

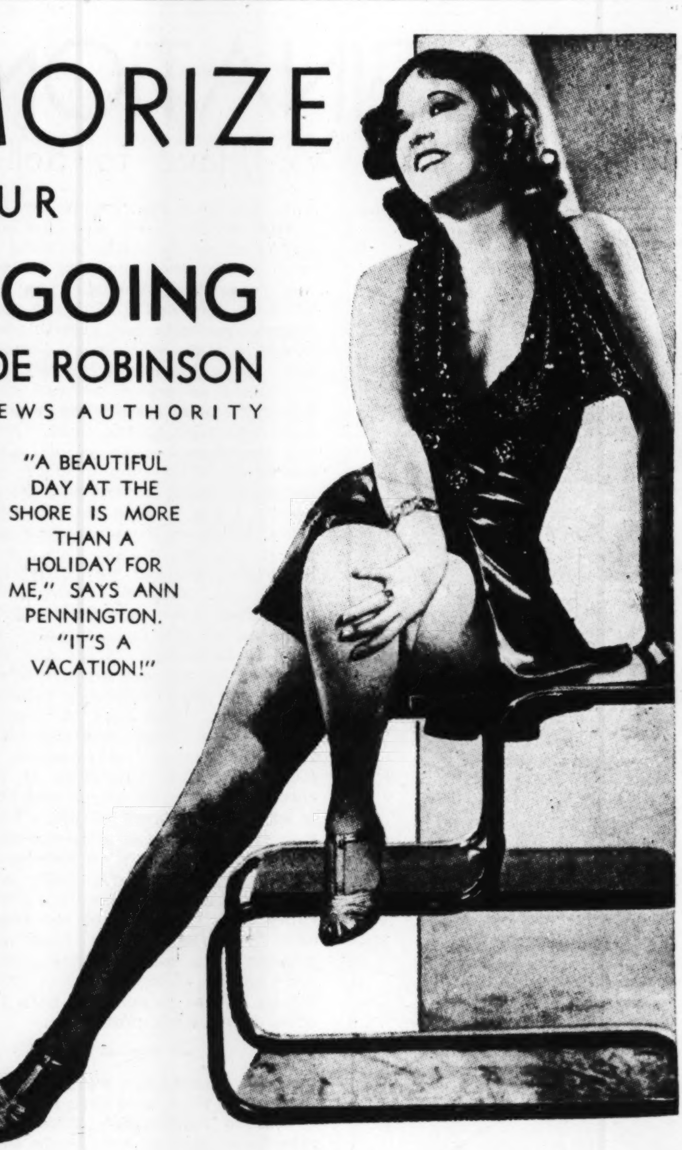
IT SEEMS TO ME that bathing-caps have always been among the most hideous blights on any beach landscape. They've made the wearers, no matter how pretty and shapely, look like skinned bunnies. Now I find that a new line of bathing caps is being styled just like millinery, which I think is a thumping fine idea. I've seen three types—turban, down-on-the-forehead, and one with an off-center point—for various styles of faces. This is the best move toward further sand-beautification I've noted in years, and we should be grateful!

GLAMORIZE YOUR BEACH-GOING

BY ALICE WADE ROBINSON

NOTED BEAUTY NEWS AUTHORITY



"A BEAUTIFUL DAY AT THE SHORE IS MORE THAN A HOLIDAY FOR ME," SAYS ANN PENNINGTON. "IT'S A VACATION!"

"I BELIEVE in the holiday spirit," said dainty Ann Pennington to me the other night at the Yacht Club, where she was dancing. "The gayer the holiday spirit the better, even though the holiday part is confined to an occasional day off. That's what most vacations are, for me. When I'm playing or dancing in the summer, for instance, I'm lucky if I manage to get even one entire day in a fortnight for relaxation in the sun. How I enjoy that! How I prepare for it! Anyone looking at me and my bulging beach bag, picnic basket, umbrella, rugs, towels and such would imagine I was planning to stay a while.

"What does it matter that my precious time off is only for a few hours? I don't care. I mean to want for nothing essential during those valuable hours. And I usually don't. Everything's with me. So I forget the city and work—to play among the pleasantest friends I have for the space of one beautiful day."

Aside from the weather and friends and the right beach paraphernalia—"a beautiful day" at the shore for Miss Pennington also includes much exercising. To be out in the open, under the sun, sand beneath the feet, the ocean temptingly near — this means for Ann Pennington an added incentive for fitness. Since she is a dancer, she practices her routine exercises every day, year in, year out. On the beach, however, she adapts her type of physical training to the place.

Clad in a fetching, stretching suit she tosses the medicine ball, jumps the waves where the surf comes pounding in, exercises arm muscles by clinging to the life lines; gives her arches and toes special stretching attention by walking at a reasonably swift pace over the dampened sand, and time and again during the day in the shade of a great beach umbrella, she snoozes. "Cat naps" they are, and they're suggestive of cats in another way. Upon waking, Miss Pennington stretches, stretch-es, s-t-r-e-t-c-h-e-s in exactly the same way a cat does upon awakening.

For myself, I can't say enough for everyday stretching. I've been trying it each morning in bed just after the alarm goes off. It's a marvelous awakener and enlivener. I feel years younger all day on those days when I steal five minutes for a thorough stretching: left arm and right leg stretched out full length, every tendon and muscle pulled its full; then the same exercise with right arm and left leg. You'll lose all sleepiness, feel fit as a fiddle if you s-t-r-e-t-c-h like this every morning. Try it as soon as you can—at home in bed, on the beach, after a swift set of tennis, as a limberer after your first hike.

It's a youth-keeper for joints and muscles. It relieves nerve tension, energizes you afresh. So s-t-r-e-t-c-h! If it causes you to yawn, so much the better—a needed fillip for diaphragm and lungs.

The beach is a place for the young-spirited, no matter what their toll of years—and it's a place where smartness counts. It's no place for "the rag" you sometimes boast you are wearing. Select your beach costume carefully.

Since borrowing's always a bore, let your beach bag be large enough to hold everything you need: bathing cap, suntan oil, anti-sunburn cream, talcum powder, comb, soap, makeup, sun glasses, nail file, change purse, cigarettes, matches, handkerchiefs. Take several towels with you; wear a large floppy hat; don't forget your beach robe. If you read at the beach take your own book or magazine. If there aren't enough umbrellas to accommodate everyone in your party, take yours with you or rent one from the attendant. It's the prepared girl who justly wins her popularity at beach parties.

Here are a few Ann Pennington hints for beach costumes: Nearly every woman looks the better for a black bathing suit. Let the very young blaze away in reds, oranges, yellows. Black is becoming whether you're over or under weight. Beware of wet white bathing suits unless they are unusually thick wool or made of a rubberized material. Better a loose bathing suit than one too tight. Ordinarily, bathing slippers with heels are more comfortable and becoming than those without. Beware of tight bathing shoes in the hot sun, they "draw." A hair net through which you've pulled as many curls as are natural looking helps to keep the hair in tow. Be as much a shade as sunpursuer on the beach; it will make your day happier, keep your skin in condition, will encourage you to many a one-day beach excursion.

CALLING ALL DOGS -:- -:- -:- By Albert Payson Terhune

SOMETIME ago I told you of a "Judas Dog"; trained to lure other canines into a Pennsylvania poundmaster's net. I thought it was the only case. It wasn't. I am going to quote a letter from a reader, Mrs. J. W. M. of Cleveland, O. It is worth your reading, if only as an instance of clever canine reasoning. She tells of a Judas dog owned by the poundmaster of an Ohio town where once she lived:

"The town's dogcatchers used a crossbred bulldog in that same way, and the neighbors nicknamed him "Judas." Our Airedale, Rex, and a police dog pal of his were romping near a street corner, one day, when the dog-pound truck stopped, and Judas hopped out as if to join the frolic. The two other dogs recognized him. They ran away, just fast enough to keep a very little ahead, and looking back at him.

"When they had traveled a block or so and were out of sight of the truck, around a corner, they turned on Judas. Each grabbed one of his ears, and tugged. Then they were all over him. The dogcatcher heard the din and he rescued Judas just in time. A month afterward a neighbor's dog played the same trick on Judas and almost killed him. Who says dogs haven't got reasoning power?"

Not I, for one. A grand story!

—o-o—

IN MAPLEWOOD, N. J., last year, the local dogcatcher was threatened with loss of his job, and for a reason so queer that the New Jersey newspapers made much of the case:

The local stray dogs had learned to recognize him and to know he was after them. This when they had seen others of their kind caught in his net and carted to the pound. Many of them banded together to raid garbage cans and street dumps, but always in some part of the town where the dogcatcher was not on duty. At sight or sound or scent of him, far off, they would take to their heels, long before he could come close enough to catch the slowest of them. It was the same with solitary strays as with the packs. They knew the catcher. They knew what he was after. And they all learned to keep out of his way.

As a result, the pound was practically empty, and the streets were infested with dogs. Because he was recognized by his potential victims, the man became almost useless. A reporter was sent to ask my views as to firing him and substituting a dogcatcher unknown to the dogs. I advised earnestly against such a step, because, within a few weeks the Maplewood dogs would be just as wary of the new man now that they had grown pound-conscious."

A Bulletin for Beachcombers

GUARD your eyes from glare to avoid wrinkles and headaches. Wear one of those crazy cart-wheel beach hats, as they do in Hollywood, or tie on a fetching sunbonnet. And be sure to get a good pair of sun glasses.

—o-o—

BE especially generous with sunburn preventive when applying it to the nose, shoulders, ankles and arches, back of the knees. They're sensitive spots you're liable to overlook.

—o-o—

DON'T forget to wear your beach robe when walking off the sands. It's bad taste to go without it.

—o-o—

SEE that toes and fingers wear the same color polish. It's not a new stunt but it continues to be chic.

—o-o—

IF you want to tan, do it gradually. Time yourself with a watch and keep turning over to get an even color.

—o-o—

SMOOTH brilliantine on your hair—it's protection against salt water.

KEEP your makeup natural. Powder and rouge are very out of place—lipstick is all you really need.

CHILLED lemonade is a perfect drink for the beach. Use a gallon-size thermos bottle for a party of four. Stay away from iced water, though, or you'll have a tummy ache.

Old-Fashioned Silk Materials Back in Style

Stunning Costumes Being Made in Foulard, Shantung, Silk Gingham.

FOULARD, shantung and silk gingham are three old-fashioned silk fabrics that are back in style this summer. Wherever you go there is at least one stunning costume which displays the vogue of the quaint materials.

Foulard is being used most extensively for summer evening frocks although some interestingly designed daytime dresses also are made of this soft-finished washable material. One that compromises between formal and informal modes has a short full skirt attached to a long-waisted basque. Embroidered batiste edged with Valenciennes ruffles form a yoke and finishes the short, gored sleeves. The colors are blue and white—a combination which formerly was regarded as most outstanding for foulard costumes.

Illustrative of the vogue of shantung are the many attractive sports dresses and suits for summer wear. Both solid colored and plain white materials are used as extensively as the printed version. One attractive outfit which combines white and print has a one-piece dress buttoned all the way up the back from hemline to the neck over which is a vividly printed shantung jacket that buttons straight up the center of the front.

Silk gingham has not attained the general popularity of shantung or foulard but is increasing in favor as the season advances. Plaid patterns look the smartest and are developed as youthful frocks which have the pleated skirts in the kiltie manner. Combinations of red and white, red, white and green, and blue and yellow are among the most outstanding.

All three of these materials are washable and usually are made of pure dye silk.

FRUIT DESSERT FOR SUNDAY SUPPER

Four ripe bananas.

One-half cup orange juice—and if you wish, a little lemon juice with it.

One-fourth cup brown sugar.

One cup grated coconut.

Grease a baking dish; a glass one is pretty. Peel and slice the bananas in half, lengthwise. Lay in a baking dish. Mix the brown sugar with the orange juice and pour that over the bananas. Sprinkle the coconut over the top and bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees) for about 10 minutes. When the coconut is toasted nice and brown the pudding is ready. Approximate yield, four portions. Children's Delight, you might call it.

Sending Child To Bed Early As Punishment

It Is Not a Good Practice to Follow, Maintains One Authority.

By Angelo Patri

"GET him to bed and keep him there for a few days until we can be certain about him. He will be far better off in bed."

"No, no, Dr. Phillip. I don't want to go to bed. I didn't do anything. I don't want to go to bed."

"O, yes you do, son. You'll feel better in bed. That ache in your legs will soon go away when you lie in your nice warm bed and rest. Bed's the best place when you don't feel so good."

"I don't want to go to bed. I hate going to bed. It's too lonesome."

"You can have picture books, for a short time anyway. Then you'll go to sleep and when you wake up you'll be very much better."

"I won't feel better if I have to go to bed. I want to lie on the couch, and sit in the big chair. I don't want to go to bed until it is night."

The sick child is fighting to stay out of bed because he was used to being sent to bed as a punishment. If he made too much noise—off to bed. If he was naughty—off to bed. If somebody complained about him—to bed he went.

"At least we can have some peace while he is there. And I know where he is," his mother said.

—o-o—

IT IS NOT a good practice. Children should know bed as the pleasant place to which they go when they are tired, or sick, and in need of rest and peace. It is a mistake to make a child's associations with his bed so unpleasant as to cause him to dislike going there. It is far better to say, "Your nice bed is waiting for you. You'll feel much better after you have rested there a little while," than to say, "You're a nuisance. The whole family is upset by your continual whining. Go to bed and stay there until I give you permission to get up again." The child may dislike going in either case, but the thought that his mother wanted to give him help and comfort will make the going easier than the thought of punishment will make it.

Healthy children are active. Active children are usually healthy and happy. It is wrong to send an active, healthy child to bed in the daytime because it means a check on activity, and the consequent misery of body and mind.

—o-o—

INSTEAD OF HELPING the child as proper punishment ought to do, it makes his condition worse. His body needs to discharge energy. It is likely that the trouble he got into was caused by his inability to discharge it fast enough through proper channels. Lying in bed only dams up the energy, increases its pressure, creates rebellion and sets the stage for disobedience. The pent-up energy must be released even if the child has to find another and a worse method of releasing than before.

If a child is pouting about the house and shouting and slamming things, laughing too loud, doing everything too much, the remedy is not bed, but release in the open air. Send him out with permission to shout and stamp until he exhausts himself. If he is rebellious and cranky, divert him. Wash his face and arms, to the elbows, with warm water and soothing soap. Pat him dry, talking gently to him all the time. Give him a glass of warm milk and a cracker. Tell him a story. Rest him without his knowing it.

When it is bed time, send him to bed, but keep him out of bed for the length of his day, unless he is sick. Then make his bed a haven of refuge.

Teatime

Use of common sense in your afternoon tea preparations is advised so that your refreshments will be of the daintiest sort. No one is interested in a big slice of rich cake or heavy cheese dishes at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Serve the most delicate sort of thin sandwiches and the lightest sort of cakes, and if you must have something hot with your tea, serve cinnamon toast.

HOW TO TELL THE NEED FOR FIRST AID IN INJURY

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Finding The Trouble

DR. CLENDENING, in the accompanying article, tells of five ways by which you can quickly tell the general condition of a person who has suffered an accident or a sudden attack of illness. After this general examination you can proceed to look for local trouble — skull fracture, broken bones, etc.

This first-aid information is important to all—especially so to those who are planning summer camping trips.

SUPPOSE you are out camping and in walking through the woods you come on one of the members of your party stretched out on the ground. You want to know what's the matter with him but he is stunned and cannot tell you. What are you going to do?

Put this paper down a minute and see what kind of an answer you give to the question.

Any doctor, I think, would answer it by saying he would like to find out his general condition. Let the particular injury go for a minute until you find out how sick he is. He may have sunstroke, or he may have stumbled and hit his head so that he has concussion, or he may have broken a bone and fainted, or eaten something that disagreed with him or poisoned him and keeled him over, but all these can wait until you find out how sick he really is.

It will only take a minute, and you can tell by ticking five signs off on your hand. Five signs, one for each finger and thumb.

—o-o—

FIRST, consciousness. We have pictured a case where consciousness is partially lost. If consciousness is present you can find out the trouble, but that should not stop you from making the four other examinations for the general condition.

Second, color. You can tell that in a flash. You know from experience how instinctively you judge that someone you know, who has just been hurt, is pretty sick by the pallor of his face. A splendid sign then of general condition—the absence or presence of shock.

Third, the breathing. The respirations should be about 15 to the minute and effortless.

Fourth, the pulse. This takes most of the time. The rate should be 70-80 a minute, full and regular.

Fifth, temperature. You do not need a thermometer. We assume you are not carrying one around with you in the woods. But your own temperature is normal and you can tell comparatively whether the patient is flushed and feverish, which may be fever, or sunstroke; or cold and clammy.

—o-o—

THERE ARE TWO general groups of cases in which these signs are changed from normal. One is in depressed conditions—due to shock from pain, fainting, exhaustion, injury to an extremity, or hemorrhage. The consciousness is dulled or incoherent, may be completely absent. The color is pale. The breathing is shallow and rapid—20-25 a minute. The pulse is weak, thready and rapid—80 to 130 a minute. The temperature is low. The skin is clammy and moist.

In head injuries, with possible concussion or skull fracture, and also in apoplexy, alcoholic intoxication and sunstroke, the consciousness again is dulled, incoherent or absent. The color is flushed—the face may be bright red or purplish. The breathing is deep and noisy, gargling or gurgling and slow, even down to 8 to 10 a minute. The pulse is slow and full and bounding—50-70 a minute. The temperature is high, the skin is hot; in sunstroke even uncomfortably hot to your fingers. If not noticeably warm, the skin is dry.

After this general examination proceed to look for local trouble—skull fracture, broken bones, try to restore consciousness with a dash of cold water in the face, and if successful, get the story.

Research Men Are Confused

By Robbin Coons

HOLLYWOOD, June 19.

MOVIE researchers are always getting themselves into quandaries, but I never expected them to stumble or doubt when it came to Lincoln's Gettysburg address.

That shows how little I know. Shame on me; I thought Lincoln composed it on a train ride to the battlefield, writing on wrapping paper. So did you, probably—but "just folk lore," say Paramount's experts.

What bothers them is that they've unearthed eight versions of the address. Which one they'll use in "Gettysburg" they still haven't decided. It boils down to this: Lincoln himself wrote six of the versions, one before he left Washington, one at Gettysburg before the dedication ceremonies, and four afterward. A reporter transcribed the seventh, and Charles Hale, member of the Massachusetts delegation to the ceremonies, transcribed the eighth in longhand, unofficially.

The version most widely known is the sixth, written by Lincoln some time after he made the speech, for incorporation in George Bancroft's "Autograph Leaves of Our Country's Authors." But did he say precisely that—that is the question.

Personally, I liked the Charles Laughton version in "Ruggles of Red Gap." Why don't they run the picture again and find out what Laughton said Lincoln said?

—o-o—

● NO FLOWER bushes so thoroughly unseen as a Hollywood actor in minor pictures. He can play a corking bit in a two-reel comedy and still be "discovered" the first time he clicks in a major feature.

Benny Baker—friend of Kenny but no relation—was supposed to be pretty funny in some two-reelers. But he got nothing more to do for nine months. He was at the point where he had to decide whether he'd give his car to the collectors here or in New York, and was favoring the latter, when he got a minor assignment in a "B" picture.

The picture soured, but the studio powers saw it. They signed him.

—o-o—

Heard about a Hollywood hostess of 10 years ago, the social queen of her time, who went to a party given by a social queen of today. The lady didn't recognize any of the guests, and none of the guests knew her. Hollywood is where death is quick but not painless.

—o-o—

BASIL RATHBONE, the meanie, plays the romantic lead in the Bobby Breen feature, "Make a Wish." To calm audience fears that Rathbone is up to his old tricks, the scenarists plotted a three-minute scene at the beginning showing that he is a nice, philosophical fellow. In three minutes you're supposed to erase all those bogeyman ideas you've got about him. It's a real test.

—o-o—

Studios often pass up a player who then proceeds to score a hit at another plant. What Metro reported on Deanna Durbin, who clicked at Universal, is not in the archives.

But I think the report card on Fred Astaire (who made his first film at M-G-M) takes the prize for picturesqueness in blundering.

"Slightly bald and can dance a little," said the fellow who is probably an ex-Metroite now.

—o-o—

● EVERY TIME Ginger Rogers has made a picture lately with another ranking woman in the cast there have been stories of feuding. . . . First it was Harriet Hilliard. . . . then Harriet Hoctor. . . . Actually there was nothing to it in either case. . . . And now that she's in "Stage Door" with Hepburn, you'll hear those stories again. . . . For your information, Ginger and Katie are pals.

It's a wise movie mamma who keeps her hands off daughter's personal and professional career. . . . That makes Martha Raye's mamma a wise one. . . . Upset at first when Martha married Buddy Westmore, she finally gave blessings.

—o-o—

Walking on the theater foyer set for "This Way, Please," Robert Florey found it decorated with posters for two Paramount pictures. Before shooting began, however, these posters had been replaced by displays on two other Paramount pictures: "King of Gamblers" and "Mountain Music." Both the latter, according to the poster credits, were directed by Robert Florey.

—o-o—

GENE MARKEY, since the divorce from Joan Bennett, still prefers blondes. . . . That was Phyllis Brooks with him at the Twentieth Century convention party the other eve. . . . The way champagne flowed on that occasion prompted Eddie Cantor to urge the sales boys not to worry—"it's all being charged against my first production . . ." . . . Nice crack, Eddie, but I think you meant Sonja Henie's next."

Reminds me that Sonja, in her innocence, once offered a casting director $10,000 just for advice on her film career. . . . The caster called in the first agent that happened to pass while Sonja was standing there. . . . Which is by way of exploding again that old Hollywood legend about casting directors and graft. . . . If internes can't take money, casters have to shy from it. . . . The first dollar would be the gun for professional suicide . . . and permanent. . . .

MANY GOOD USES OF IMAGINATION

Among Other Things, It Can Help Us Discover New Markets for What We Have to Sell

By Dorothea Brande

This is the eighth article of a series on "Wake Up and Live."

SUCCESS IMAGINATION

ALREADY imagination's contribution to a productive life has been considered somewhat, and its help has been called on in the matter of making that favorable mental climate which is necessary if we are to produce our best work. But imagination has innumerable other uses, it can be helpful in ways so diverse that the same faculty hardly seems to be in operation in all of them.

In everyday life, we tend to think of the imagination as something which may, perhaps, be spoken of as "useful" to artists of all sorts, but as being almost the opposite of useful in the lives of practical men and women. To use one's imagination, generally, is thought of as taking a holiday, as allowing the wits to go wool-gathering, the mind to relax and sun itself. After indulging it—for we commonly think of the exercise of the imagination as being in some way an indulgence—we may return refreshed to the commonplace, or we may find we have lost time, missed contacts, got out of step with our companions and helpers; in short, suffered for allowing one part of the mind free play.

As a consequence we look warily at the imagination, often seeking to check it, or, in some extreme cases, even to eradicate it. That it can be of immense benefit in the most prosaic affairs is an idea at which many readers will balk. But that is because they do think of the imagination as a faculty which always wanders unchecked, which must be permitted to make its own rules and occasions, which is incapable of being directed, and, to a great extent, controlled-put at the service of the reason and the will. Thus controlled and directed, it becomes the mature creative imagination, the spiritual faculty of which Joubert speaks.

But consider a few of the many things which it can usefully do for us; it can help us to stand away from ourselves somewhat, holding the emotions and prejudices which often keep us from seeing clearly well in hand. By so doing we may find that we are thwarting our own best interests constantly, and can replace the disadvantageous activities—still in the imagination—by others which will bring about happier results. It can be turned on the character of an opponent or an unco-operative "helper" while we study him as an author might study a character whom he hopes to place in a book. We can get clues to his motives, and thereafter watch to see whether we have been right about them, thus saving ourselves from such mistakes as being too brusque with a sensitive person, or too laxly indulgent with another who will exploit us if we give him the opportunity.

Nor does this begin to exhaust the ways in which imagination, instead of betraying us into revery and resignation to unsatisfactory conditions—instead, even, of being employed merely as a means of recreation—can contribute to the making of a good life. Working as far as possible under orders from the will, and hand-in-hand with reason, it can explore new fields for our efforts, can bring back to us some of our original freshness towards our work which we have lost by fatigue and routine; it can even perform such a severely practical function for us as to discover new markets for our wares, or new ways in which to use old talents.

These ideas are worth a little closer examination here, and later the insertion of some exercises in using the imagination.

We need not belong to that group which, as we say, "can only learn by experience." Having discovered that much of our dread of engaging in new activity comes from unconquered fear of the pain which we formerly met when we began to go forward, we can decide that some of our "trial-and-error" attempts at managing life shall go on in the mind, in the imagination, where it is, to all intents, painless. We can learn to look ahead imaginatively, an so save ourselves from blunders, ineffectuality, loss of energy and time.

First of all, we can use imagination to see ourselves and our work in some perspective.

Everyone knows how a child identifies himself utterly with all he owns and does, with all those who care for him. He is outraged if asked to share his possession, the breaking of a beloved toy is a tragedy, if it rains on the day when a picnic was planned one would think the sun could never shine for him again. If a mother or nurse leaves him while he is awake, he has been most treacherously betrayed. In fact, much early education has as its one goal the teaching of the little egotist to see himself in somewhat truer relation to his world. More or less successfully, each of us has had to learn this lesson; but it is almost never fully understood. To our last days there is still a trace of that childish egotism in us—sometimes so very much more than a trace that an adult suffers, resents, sulks, and complains in a way only too reminiscent of the nursery.

There is no success which does not entail a relationship between the individual and others. (That artist who "works only to please himself" is a chimera, as mythical a beast as the hippogriff.) Since that is so, there will be occasions on which it is immensely important for us to see ourselves clearly, and in scale with those around us. Each of us at some time is in a position to have to say to himself, "Here am I; here is the work I do; here are those I hope to help and please by this work." Imagination can help us to stand back and see that relationship in perspective, can analyze its parts and suggest to us the full scope of what we have undertaken.

THE infantile adult can never see himself clearly; even less can he see his work or the object he has made quite as it is, undistorted by the over-estimation of personal pride, or the under-estimation of humility and fear. Consequently he is never in a position to know just where his contribution does go in the scheme of his world, and is at the mercy of the reports of friends or strangers. Even here he is bewildered; however plain the words may be, however just the estimate which is given him, he will not hear exactly what is said because he cannot bring to the moment his undivided and unemotional attention. His intense preoccupation with his own hopes and desires spoils him as a recording instrument. He cannot benefit by good advice or sound criticism; nor, on the other hand, can he know when such advice is mistaken, and the criticism not expert.

By looking, in imagination, first at himself, then at the work he wants to do, then at the audience to whom he hopes to appeal; and, finally, by bringing all these elements into relation with each other, he could keep his courage from being undermined, his mind unconfused by conflicting advice, his estimate of his performance just.

Now, to identify ourselves too long with work we do is a bad mistake, and a mistake through which we can be hurt and hampered. The past few years have taught us much about the folly of so identifying ourselves with our children that they are rendered incapable of leading independent lives. The mother who clings to her adult (or even adolescent) child, suffering with him, making his decisions, undergoing humiliation on his account, unable to live her own life fully if he is not leading the sort of life she covets for him meddling with his affairs, dictating his professional and social interests is no longer looked upon as the sum of maternal love and wisdom.

While we may not always practice as wisely as we should, few men and women today consider the complete identification of themselves with their children as either praiseworthy or desirable. We have to that extent learned perspective about one of the most fundamental relations of life. We know that our work as parents is to do all in our power to equip the child to live a happy, healthy adult life, to put up no unnecessary barriers before his independent activities, to leave him free to select his friends and to form his own judgments as soon as possible. What is more, we know that it is desirable that every adult, whether parent or child, should have his own interests, and that only the possession of such interests will guarantee that no unwholesome interference with the life of another will take place. Further, no one believes for a moment that because a saner understanding of a parent's functions is replacing the old dictatorship, which was tyrannical even when it was motivated by deep affection the love between mother or father and child is in any way decreasing

The analogy of any finished piece of work with a child is very close: each has to be carried, cherished, nourished as part of one's very self during the early stages. But with full growth there comes a time when each should have its independent identity. If we intend to get all we can from living, we must learn when to go on from one task to the next. Even the most productive of us could contribute more than he does; our output is about halved because we do not learn to separate ourselves from the things that are done and put our energy into the work which is ahead. Instead we turn and watch the fortunes of what we have lately been engrossed in. To some extent this in inevitable; we need to know the history and fortunes of our finished work in so far as we can learn anything valuable from them. But here is a place where the average man can learn from the genius. Abundance, as Edith Wharton has said, is the sign of the true vocation; and that is so in any branch of life. Your true genius—whether a Leonardo, a Dickens, a Napoleon, an Edison—is always going on. Versatility and abundance are not, as we are sometimes told, the signs of the mediocre workman. When they are present in a mediocre man, they are, on the contrary, the very things he has in common with the great men of his profession.

SO accustomed are we to doing a piece of work, and then standing still to contemplate what happens to it, that we constantly wonder at those who do not make the same error. We even, erroneously, believe that they must "drive themselves" relentlessly in order to accomplish what they manage to do Now, nothing of the sort is true—or it is not necessarily true. What has happened is that the time, the energy, the attention which in lesser men goes into waiting for approval. listening to comments, wondering whether some item or other might have been better done, is going forward and opening up new paths. It is not at all that the healthfully prolific men and women are complacent, or oblivious to real criticism; they know that if anything pertinent is said they will hear it. Experience has taught them that we are never deaf to what truly concerns us. What they have learned is not to wait to hear comment; and so their lives are twice as full and satisfactory as those of us who cannot learn when to let the results of our thought and labor, our mental offspring, go out to lead their own lives.

Imagination can bring us to understand how such sane workers operate, and suggest ways in which we can imitate them.

"OKAY, THE BRITISH ARE COMING! NOW GET BACK TO BED!"

How Emotions Play Part in True Beauty

By Helen Jameson

"SHE'S lovely. She's human. She has warmth and tenderness. Children climb into her lap, dogs wag their tails when they see her, kittens purr. What does it matter if her hair is a dingy drab or her hands spotted with moth patches?" asked one woman of another when they were speaking of a mutual friend.

What a contrast is the subject of these remarks to old Frozen Assets who never smiles, who is the cat that walks alone? You know her, everybody does. Sometimes she isn't old in years. She may be under 40. She has gone sour, her soul had mildewed, lemonated nature is stamped upon her countenance. She doesn't have any fun. There is the glint of criticism in her eye. Oh, my children, take a good look at her. Remember her when bitter thoughts come into your mind, and chase them out. They are the enemies of beauty.

Ask yourself; what sort of an emotional set-up have you? Have you got your foot on the necks of your mean qualities? Have you helped the good ones to flower? If you have reached that state, you are mistress of your soul, you have beauty that is appealing.

—o-o—

A GOOD METHOD of self-examination is to stand before a mirror and play act. Turn on the highlights and smile. Lift the eyelids and eyebrows. See if you can get sparkles in your eyes. You can do that by digging up some pleasant memory or by feeling flirtatious.

Frown. It may surprise you to see that lines are deep when you pull your eyes together. Let the face relax. Relaxation may reveal soft jaw tissues of which you are unaware. Look sad. You will decide that being a melancholy beauty isn't any great shakes. Turn on the expression lights. Turn on the shadows. See yourself as others see you. Decide to be a woman alive.

One of the most valuable of all beauty assets is animation. It flushes the cheeks, it puts starshine in the eyes. You can't have it if you feel that every hand is raised against you. You can't have it without health and vitality.

—o-o—

WE'RE ALWAYS writing about the destructive effects of unpleasant emotions; maybe the beauty class gets tired of that subject. But it is an all-important one not only because of beauty griefs but because lives are changed by jealousy, anger, envy. Sometimes love is lost. A woman's world can crash because of a few sharp words. It is something to be thought about, deeply and often.

The muscles of the face are delicate. Smiling strengthens them. Dropping the mouth corners weakens them. What goes on inside the heart and the mind actually affects fibers, tissues and blood streams. It is heaven's truth.

Variety in Hats

LITTLE pillbox hats that attain new summer heights indicate that the width of a chapeau is no more certain than the depth of its crown. For very casual wear such as a luncheon in the country there are cleverly designed pillboxes made of rough straw while for lunching in town the same little brimless hat style appears of shiny alpaca or dark starched linen. Not an inch of trimming adorns these trim little models—another defiant gesture of the milliners when flowers, ribbons, veils and feathers decorate most feminine heads.

There can be no second try for the performers in a stage play. They have to memorize all their lines in advance and be able to go through them without a miss. Even the screen players who have come from the stage have gotten out of the habit of learning lines and would have a difficult time doing it again, especially if they had to do a new play once a week, as they will when television starts. Old-time stock actors could do it but the stock companies are dead and buried

ALSO it must be remembered that real acting is not required by the cinema fans of their popular stars. The genuine actors of the screen have come to Hollywood from the stage, but they are not the players who are the idols of the customers. Few if any excellent stage performers are among the top-notchers in public cinema favor. If you think we're wrong, try and name a dozen or even three or four. What the screen has always required is personality of the sort which photographs well. Any competent director and a patient camera man can, by doing a scene over and over again, get just what they want out of a player at some time.

The radio and film stars being out of it, then the way would seem to be clear for the genuine actors of the older stage. But a hitch developed there, too, almost at once as the television experimenters soon found out. Many of the actors left upon the stage do not have that photographic personality which will be required for television just as it is for pictures. If they had it they would, for the most part, be in the fancy paying films today instead of looking for work in New York. It is also true that acting on the stage does not, in itself, train a voice for broadcasting. There are many excellent actors who cannot register through a "mike" at all.

Where, then, will television turn for performers in the plays which will have to be given, as "commercials," to provide the proper financial returns? The movie moguls and the broadcast big shots, working hand in hand, feel that the actors will have to come at the start from the thin rank of stage players with broadcasting experience but that, eventually, an entirely new school of player must be developed; an actor who can act, have a voice which will carry well over the air AND have a million-dollar picturable personality.

DRAMA MOTION PICTURES MUSIC

Television Tryouts on Sly At West Coast Stations

Regular Facilities Used to Get an Idea of What Is Necessary for New Technique—Meanwhile to Listeners, Unaware of the Situation, It All Sounds a Little Silly.

By H. H. Niemeyer.

HOLLYWOOD, June 19.

QUIETLY, without letting the listening public in on the secret, the big broadcasting chains and the movie makers have been conducting a series of nation-wide tests to discover just how they will go about televisioning plays when the ready, willing and waiting television is finally thrown on the market. Dramas running a full hour have gone out on the air from Hollywood without any commercial sponsor advertising. Too long and, apparently, too pointless as "sustaining" programs, home listeners wondered what it was all about.

What was going on—and is still going on—was just this. The chains and the vitally interested picture producers want to find out what type of plays will be best suited to television. They selected about a dozen pieces and prepared them for air production. Only the spoken lines went out, of course, for no hookups have yet been provided for sending out moving pictures extensively. The dialogue then went on the air and the producers got an idea of what the action would look like by watching the play performed in a Hollywood theater while the lines were being broadcast.

They discovered a good many things right off the bat. One of them—which incidentally had nothing to do with television—was the fact that the radio requires continuous and unhalting conversation. Sitting in the theater and watching the play unfold, the perfectly natural pauses such as when a character walked across the stage to pick up a book or stood terrorized by something he saw at a window were as dramatically effective as they were meant to be. But the far-away audiences, who could hear but not see what was going on, wondered what the delays meant and why they were allowed to happen.

On that point alone the trials, as real tests, were almost wrecked and they haven't entirely gotten around it yet.

But they made other important discoveries, too, one of them being that an entirely new crop of television actors will have to be raised, or at least, cultivated when picture plays are sent out over the air. One might imagine that the regular radio entertainers of today would step right into the jobs but most of them won't do. You see the radio entertainers have been selected for their voices alone, how those voices sounded through the mikes and how well the owners of the voices were able to read—and we use the word "read" in the actual, not the stage meaning—their lines. Appearance and "camera poise," to say nothing of the very necessary, for stage purposes, ability to act cut no figure in radio but it was quickly found that a great many star broadcasting performers would not do at all for television except, perhaps, as vaudeville or specialty acts.

Taking up the movie actors next it was found that the great majority of them would be unable to learn their lines. In the present films you know an actor only has to commit to memory a few words at a time. They learn the lines for a single scene while waiting for the director to call "action" and then face the camera and say them. You'd be surprised, too, at the number of big salaried screen players who "blow up" in those few words and have to be photographed again and again until they can repeat them perfectly. There can be no second try for the performers in a stage play. They have to memorize all their lines in advance and be able to go through them without a miss. Marxes Bring Home a Winner

By Colvin McPherson

THERE'S a new Marx Brothers picture at Loew's, and the latest Marx picture is always the best and funniest they have ever made.

For audiences know what to expect and can depend on it. There'll be something of a romantic story, some musical production numbers, stock villains and stuffed shirts, but mainly an epidemic of laughter that demoralizes everything. So it is with "A Day at the Races." Good humor and bad, subtle and slapstick, epigrams and puns, all kinds for everybody, it comes so thick and fast that you're not able to linger long on any particular bit of it.

Groucho is a horse doctor posing as the chief of staff of a luxurious sanitarium. Harpo rides the nags at the neighboring racetrack. Chico drives the sanitarium bus and helps out with the plot. The immortal antics of the three are welded to the rest of the film in the usual what's-the-difference fashion, letting up for the moment when Allan Jones, Vivien Fay and chorus girls do a gorgeous musical tableau on a blue lagoon (the film's tinted an odd shade) and when the stable darkies go into "swing" hysteria, but rarely ceasing otherwise.

Top scenes, according to audience reaction of the opening day, are those where Chico pays the Sheriff $5 bills for the feed for Allan Jones' horse, and Harpo steals the money as fast as the Sheriff puts it in his pocket; where Chico sells Groucho a tip on the latest race, in order to get enough money to place a bet of his own; especially where Groucho fakes a Florida telephone call to Leonard Ceeley in the next office and at the same time tells Ceeley to makes less noise, over an inter-office dictograph connection; where Groucho, Chico and Harpo conduct a medical examination of their old friend, Margaret Dumont. These scenes, and those in which Harpo wrecks a grand piano playing Rachmaninioff's C-Sharp Minor Prelude and Chico and Harpo hang wallpaper on the blonde menace of the picture, are proper prelude to the horse race in which, by a variation of the "David Harum" stunt, Jones' High Hat is made to come in first and save the sanitarium for its pretty owner, Maureen O'Sullivan.

Jones' importance to the film is only that of another crooner. The musical numbers, "On Blue Venetian Waters" and "Tomorrow Is Another Day," are hardly brilliant enough to give his voice full range but "A Day at the Races" will not be ranked as one of his major picture efforts, anyway.

Ceeley, who has returned to St. Louis to take part in "Music in the Air" at Municipal Opera next week makes a splendid villain as manager of the sanitarium and has the footage of film that he deserves. The howlingly delightful scene between him and Groucho on the office connections would be far less entertaining if Ceeley had not played it to the limit and worked up the most beautiful rage possible.

Among other credits would be one for Vivien Fay, whose solo work in the "Blue Venetian Waters" ballet scene is just about the best ever screened. Loew's short subject divertissements are a travel talk on Bombay and a Disney cartoon, "More Kittens," both in color.

Slim.

WORTHY of notice by discriminating moviegoers and certainly worthy of being copied by screen writers and directors is "Slim," the electric power drama at the Fox, where also Pretty Boy Taylor and Irene Dunne are to be seen in revival of their "Magnificent Obsession."

"Slim," written both in novel form and for the screen by William Wister Haines, is a sincere, intelligent story of linemen on the high tension wires that carry power across the country. Basically, it tells only of two friends, Pat O'Brien and Henry Fonda, who love the same girl, Margaret Lindsay, and how one of them is eliminated by their dangerous occupation.

But anyone who has ever worked with any kind of construction or maintenance crew will know that here is crew language, that this dialogue was written by somebody who had keen ears and a fast writing hand, that these characters are true to life and that "Slim" probably happened somewhere, at some time. As a result, the tribute paid to the linemen is not wasted but turns out to be something almost as fine and almost as thrilling as "Ceiling Zero." For a picture lacking ballyhoo, "Slim" is extraordinarily good.

The documentary style of the opening, with glorious photographic shots of Boulder Dam in action, the flashes of tall electric towers, the treatment of camp life, a brawl in a western dive, and even the romance itself are handled with restraint and distinction. Performances of O'Brien, Fonda and Miss Lindsay are smooth and sustained.

"Magnificent Obsession" is still what it was—pure nokum. Its hushed tones, its pathos, its sentiment, its neat way of solving the problems of the universe with a trite formula are surely not valid reasons for bringing it back at this time.

Sing and Be Happy.

TONY MARTIN, who has a fine singing voice; Leah Ray, who has also a good voice and a manner, if she wouldn't try to stick her tongue out while singing, and Joan Davis, who knows how to be funny even when the screen play writers have a poor sense of humor, do not get the opportunities they should have in "Sing and Be Happy," at the Ambassador.

For these three recent discoveries are left to flounder around in a musical farce that has no organization whatsoever and dialogue that seems to have been invented as production went along. Martin, cast as the band leader son of an advertising man, and Miss Ray, as daughter of the head of another agency, join in the feud between their parents.

After inter-office spying and story-telling to persons who can give the big contracts, the families get together in a radio audition in which everything is washed up.

"Two Who Dared," which features Anna Sten and Henry Wilcoxon, has some of the elements of "Resurrection." Russian officer loves peasant girl. It must not go on, but it does. There's a big trial, the officer is disgraced but gets the girl. So who are the losers?

"Richard II" Booked

Despite assurances that several Broadway successes of 1936-37 season will play at the American Theater next fall and winter have been received from New York producers. Heading the list is "King Richard II," starring Maurice Evans, young English actor. Others are "Tovarich," Robert E. Sherwood's translation of a French comedy and Clare Boothe's satire on her sex, "The Women." Actual dates are not given.

Evans' performance of "King Richard II"—Shakespeare's, of course—has been named the best of the year by four dramatic critics, and has received the annual award of the New York Drama League. "Tovarich," pronounced "Toe-VAR-ish," has been presented in 31 countries and is about two Czarist exiles in Paris who refuse to give up a large royal treasure entrusted to their care.

Announced for the American since last spring is Helen Hayes' "Victoria Regina." The booking is for the spring of 1938.

ANNAMARY DICKEY, NEW MUNICIPAL THEATER SOPRANO,
WHO STEPS INTO A BIG ROLE OF HER OWN AS SIEGLINDE IN
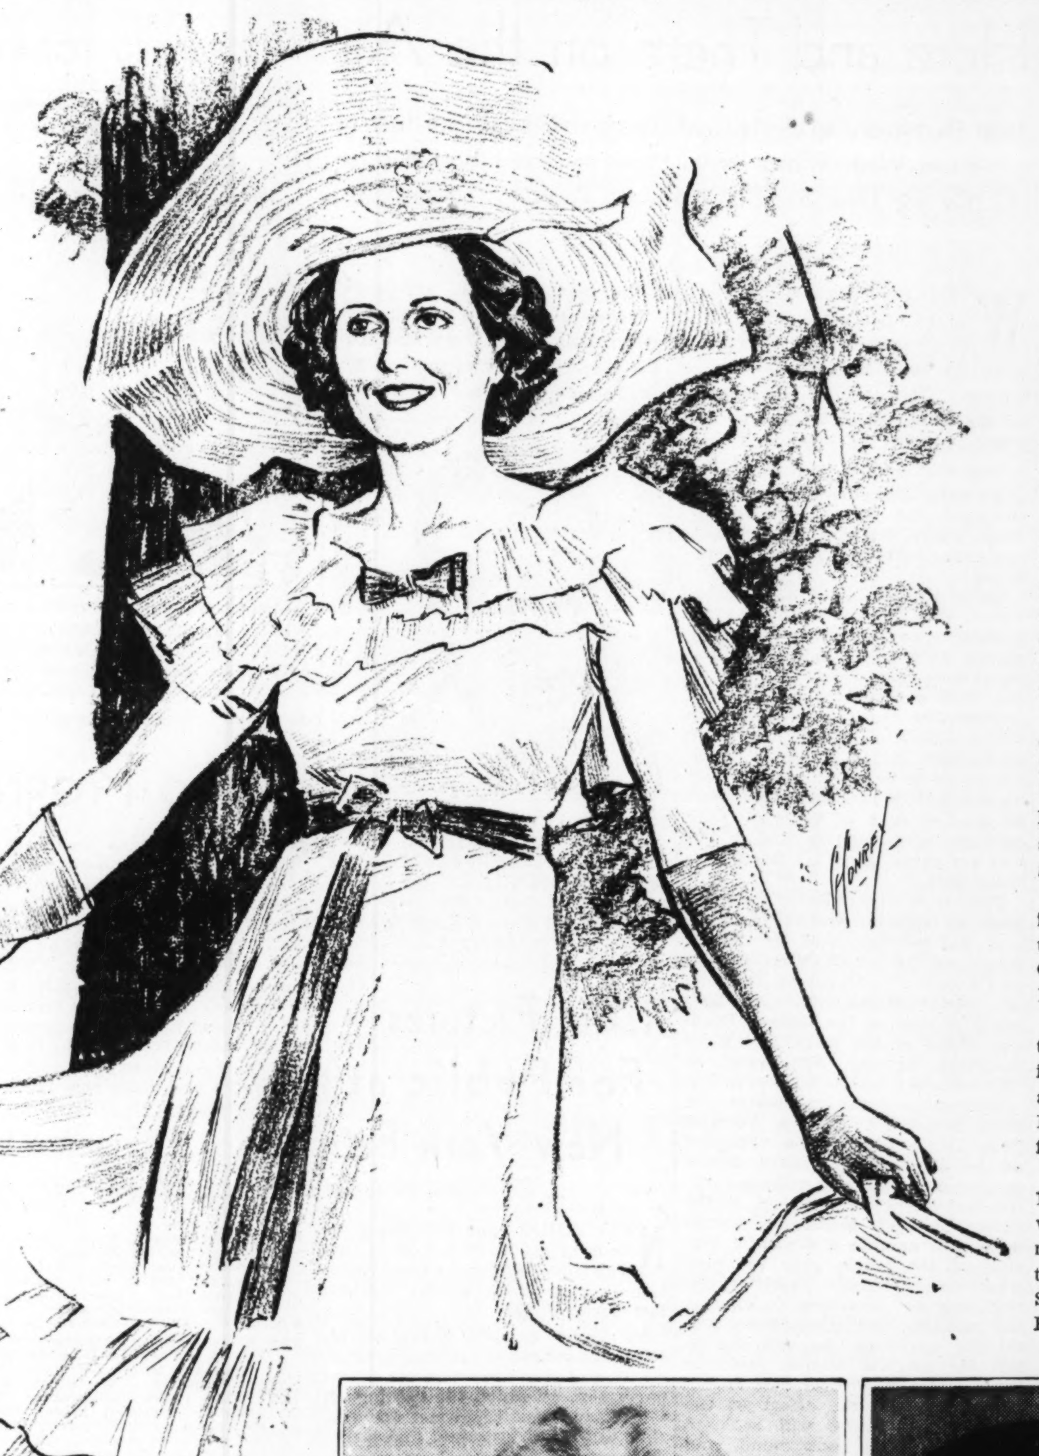
"MUSIC IN THE AIR."



Music in Forest Park Air During the Coming Week

Kern-Hammerstein Operetta, With "I've Told Every Little Star," "The Song Is You" and Many Other Lilting Ditties, Is Back Again—Annamary Dickey Featured.

TURNING to the library of modern operettas, Municipal Opera has selected for its third show, opening tomorrow night in Forest Park, the winsome and highly melodic "Music in the Air," by the contemporary team of Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein II. Victor Herbert's revived "Fortune Teller" bows out with this evening's performance.

In the leading feminine role of the Bavarian maiden, Sieglinde, in "Music in the Air" will be Annamary Dickey, young soprano who won a following among Municipal Opera patrons 10 days ago when she sang the leading role of Resi in "The Great Waltz" on an evening when Bernice Claire was incapacitated by laryngitis. Still classified as a Decatur (Ill.) girl, Miss Dickey had a musical education at the Julliard School and several professional engagements before coming to Forest Park for the first time this season.

Sieglinde's sweetheart, Karl Reder, will be played by Guy Robertson; her music-master father, Herr Doktor Walther Lessing, by Harry Mestayer; the temperamental prima donna, Frieda Hatzfield, by Gladys Baxter; the equally temperamental playwright, Bruno Mahler, by Leonard Ceeley, and Herr Kapellmeister Uppman by Joseph Macaulay. To John Gurney, young Metropolitan Opera basso, goes the role of Cornelius, the singing bird man.

Several of the principals have the same assignments they had in a previous Municipal Opera production of "Music in the Air" in the summer of 1934. These are Miss Baxter, Ceeley and Macaulay. Charlotte Lansing was Sieglinde in 1934 and Allan Jones the Karl Reder of that year.

Ceeley, who has been away from Municipal Opra for the last two seasons, comes here from Hollywood, where he has appeared in several films, "Moonlight Murder," "The Soldier and the Lady" and the current Marx Brothers picture, "A Day at the Races," at Loew's Theater. Allan Jones has the romantic lead in the same film.

"Music in the Air," which ran for nearly a year in New York's 1932-33 season, is characterized by its wealth of songs, several of which were hits a few years ago. Best known are the theme melody, "I've Told Every Little Star" and "The Song Is You," although "There's a Hill Beyond a Hill," "In Egern on the Tegern See," "Melodies of May," "And Love Was Born," "I'm Coming Home," "I'm Alone" and "A Prayer" contribute much to the score.

The previous Municipal Opera presentation of "Music in the Air" is the only one on the local stage in the musical play's history. A picture version, with Gloria Swanson, John Boles, June Lang and Douglass Montgomery, was shown at the Fox Theater several years ago.

IN 10 swiftly-changing scenes, "Music in the Air" is the story of Bavarian village folk who attempt to win musical success in the big city of Munich and have only heart-breaking failure. But in the failure, they realize that life in their village is far happier than it would have been in the city and the true and innocent love of Karl and Sieglinde, threatened in the metropolis, finds its joyful realization back home.

Newcomers to Municipal Opera in this week's cast are Blanche Ring, comedienne of long experience on the American stage, and Mary Hopple, contralto of concert and operetta. Miss Ring plays Frau Kirschner, the producer's wife in "Music in the Air," and Miss Hopple the secretary, Marthe.

With a long list of musical shows to her credit, Miss Ring is noted for her ability to turn a song into an immediate hit. Among those she introduced are "In the Good Old Summer Time," "The Belle of Avenue A," "Dixie Dan," "Waltz Me Around Again, Willie," "Yip Aye Addy" and "Everybody Used to Call Me Jimmy." Plays in which she has appeared are "Once in a Lifetime," "As You Were," "The Cradle Snatchers," "Ladies of the Jury" and "Dinner at Eight."

Miss Hopple, originally a discovery of the late Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, made her musical debut in 1922, has sung principal roles in "Robin Hood," "The Vagabond King" and "Die Fledermaus" and has had a great deal of radio experience.

Supporting roles in "Music in the Air" go also to Detmar Poppen, Ruth Urban, Robert Pitkin, Gus Howard, Lew Parker, Phil Porterfield and Erika Zaranova. Choruses participate in the singing school which Doktor Lessing conducts in his hometown.

Following "Music in the Air," Municipal Opera will present, for the first time, Ziegfeld's musical comedy, "Louie the 14th." New cast enlistments then will be Al Trahan, singing and dancing comedian, Margaret Daum, Metropolitan Opera singer, Wilbur Evans, baritone, Yukona Cameron, comedienne, Olive Olsen, comedian, Bert Prival, member of the Hollywood Ballet, and the Hudson Wonders, an acrobatic dance team.

Little Symphony's First Concert of Season on Friday

THE Little Symphony will open its third season of open-air concerts Friday evening, at 8:30 o'clock, in the Quadrangle of Washington University. The orchestra of 22 men, under the direction of Hans Lange, will play this program:

Concerto Grosso in F. Major — Handel
Septet for Wood, Brass and Strings — Beethoven
Summer Pastoral — — — — Honnegger
Workout — — — — — — —McBride
The Village Festival — — Stephen Foster

The Handel Concerto Grosso is one of a series of 12 written by the celebrated classic Anglo-Teuton composer. Like all the others it consists of an interplay of effects between the full orchestra and a smaller series of soloists called the concertino.

The Beethoven Septet is one of the early Beethoven works but it has a romantic rather than a classic atmosphere. Scored for strings, horn, bassoon and clarinet, it will be played with strings augmented in order to produce the necessary sonority.

The Pastorale d'Ete or Summer Pastoral of Arthur Honnegger, a French contemporary composer, was written at the instance of Vladimir Golschmann and submitted it anonymously in a prize contest. It won first prize and was subsequently played under Mr. Golschmann's direction at the Concerts Golschmann in Paris.

The Workout by Robert McBride is an essay in the modern idiom with jazz rhythms and melodies predominating. McBride is a young American living in Rochester, N. Y., and is noted for his exhaustive understanding of the orchestra and its possibilities.

An extraordinary novelty on the program is the Village Festival by Stephen Foster, who is one of America's great folk-song composers by virtue of his authorship of "My Old Kentucky Home," "Swanee River" and others. The Village Festival is a set of quadrilles scored for strings and flute. They are gay, rhythmic and lyrical and aside from their direct appeal show an important phase of the development of American music.

The Quadrangle at Washington University is surrounded by four buildings and the musicians will be seated on a platform at the center of the library. The platform will be immediately surrounded by chairs which will be occupied by reserve seats holders. At the back and sides of the reserve seats will be open spaces, where persons who have bought only a general admission ticket may sit on the grass. In case of rain Friday evening, the performance will follow on Saturday evening.

Reserve seat subscription tickets as well as individual tickets for seats and for general admission may be purchased at the door and seats are now on sale at the Baldwin Piano Co., the Doubleday Doran Book Shop, J. Lesser Goldman Book Shop and the Open Door. Price schedules have been lowered this year in order to increase attendance.

The Little Symphony under the direction of Max Steindel gave a concert June 15 at Galesburg, Ill., before a packed house and with outstanding success. Four encores were played after the announced program.

Here and There on the Air

John Barrymore to Be Starred Tomorrow Night in First of Series With Which NBC Plans to Beat CBS Chain to Starting Date for Broadcasts of Plays by Shakespeare.

By J. L. S.

WITH John Barrymore heading the cast, the NBC tomorrow night will anticipate the CBS network's ambitious schedule of Shakespeare's plays broadcasts, planned for July and August, by broadcasting the first of six weekly performances of his dramas. The opening NBC production, set for 7:30 to 8:15 o'clock on the WJZ network, but not on KWK, will be of "Hamlet." On subsequent Monday nights, at the same time, Barrymore will play in "Richard the Third," "Macbeth," "King Lear,' "Richard the Second," and either "Winter's Tale" or "Cymbeline."

There will be direct conflict between the two network Shakespearean performances Monday nights, July 12, 19 and 26, as the Barrymore production will be on the WJZ chain from 7:30 to 8:15 and the CBS chain's broadcast from 7 to 8 o'clock. However, there will be no conflict for St. Louis listeners so far as local stations are concerned. KMOX is to carry only half an hour of each of the eight CBS network performances and KWK will not carry the NBC Barrymore broadcasts.

Tomorrow night, Barrymore will play the Ghost as well as "Hamlet," and will be supported by Conrad Nagel as "Horatio"; Miles Lander as "Polonius"; Margaret Brayton, an NBC actress, as "Ophelia"; Mary Forbes as the Queen; Brandon Hurst as the King, and Hans Conriend, another NBC actor, as "Marcellus."

Barrymore plans to present the plays in what he calls a "streamlined" style, based on a variation of the old Greek dramatic device of chorus or narrator setting forth the "argument" of the play. At the outset of each broadcast, Barrymore will narrate a dramatic version of the whole play to give whatever explanatio and exposition may be necessary to express the meaning and atmosphere. After this narration, he will act in full his favorite scenes, selecting those which he deems best fit together to give the effect of the whole play. Music will be used to give a tonal background, and the orchestra will be directed by Will Prior, a student of Shakespeare who has had wide experience in symphony orchestras and in theater work.

Since Sept. 8, 1929, the NBC has broadcast on the WEAF and WJZ chains 70 performances of plays by Shakespeare.

The CBS network is still selecting the actors from Broadway and the movies for the leading roles, and for the supporting cast of 100, for its Shakespearean series, which will replace the Radio Theater Monday nights for eight weeks, starting July 12. The plays selected by the CBS for broadcasting are "Hamlet," "Macbeth," "Taming of the Shrew," "King Lear," "Twelfth Night," "As You Like It," "Henry IV" and "Much Ado About Nothing." Brewster Morgan will be the director and a symphony orchestra will furnish the musical background.

The NBC was unable to get Barrymore for more than six programs because of his movie commitments. The CBS plays probably will come from New York and the Pacific Coast, but there is a possibility that one of the Shakespearean plays may be broadcast from Chicago and there is some talk of putting one on the air from St. Louis, either from an auditorium or from the KMOX playhouse. Burgess Meredith may play the title role in "Hamlet" for the CBS and Jean Dante may play "Juliet." Barrymore is reported to have been promised $12,000 for the six perfromances, and the CBS weekly payroll for its eight plays will be $7500 or more.

Plans for broadcasting the Goldman band concerts from the Mall in Central Park, New York, have been changed. For the present, only the Monday concerts will be scheduled, at 6:30 p. m., on the WJZ net, starting tomorrow.

A microphone set-up well nigh as elaborate as for a President's inauguration is planned for the broadcasting of the Boy Scouts' Jamboree in Washington. It will include a tent studio, and require 50 or more announcers and engineers. The broadcasts will run from June 30 to July 9 on the WEAF, WJZ and CBS chains.

Tribal chants and tom-tom rhythm at the pow-wow at Flagstaff, Ariz., in which several thousand Hopi, Zuni, Navajo and other Indians will take part, will be heard in a special broadcast on the WEAF network at 9 p. m. Saturday, July 3, that will be translated by short wave for world-wide reception. Already seven of the big European broadcasting systems have expressed a desire to carry the program.

Reginald Bates, British author of "The Olive Field," is commenting on news on EAR, Madrid, 9.48 meg., at 6:30 p. m. Tuesdays and Fridays. EAR also carries news stories at 6:30 other evenings. EAR, official Spanish Loyalist station, formerly was E2AQ. It has been off the air for two weeks.

The all-star baseball game will be broadcast Wednesday, July 7, probably on all the chains. The CBS chain will start the broadcast at 12:30 noon and carry it until the game is finished.

JOHN BARRYMORE REHEARSING FOR THE BROADCAST OF PLAYS BY SHAKESPEARE, IN WHICH HE WILL BE FEATURED AT 7:30, MONDAY NIGHTS, ON THE WJZ NETWORK, BEGINNING TOMORROW.

Radio Pictures For Public at New York Fair

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 19.—The public is to get its first look at the television system under field test in New York at the world's fair here in 1939.

So David Sarnoff, president of RCA, announced in another demonstration of television here for newspapermen, at which the signing of a contract was broadcast for the first time both by sound and sight.

The signing took place in the special NBC television studio in Radio City with Grover Whalen, president of the fair, and Lenox R. Lohr, president of NBC, taking part. It was viewed on receivers in another part of the RCA building by a group of 75, mostly newspapermen.

The contract calls for the erection of a special RCA building at the fair in which all branches of radio and television will be exhibited. Lohr, who was president of the Chicago World's Fair, will be in charge, in addition to his duties as NBC president.

Sarnoff said that in this building would be television, "whatever its status may be at that time," in a demonstration for the public. It will be linked directly with the NBC television transmitter on the Empire State building.

Braddock-Louis Fight Story On KSD at 9 P. M. Tuesday

Clem McCarthy and Edwin C. Lewis to Describe Bout—Poughkeepsie Regatta Broadcast Tuesday Afternoon.

KSD is scheduled to broadcast the running account of the James Braddock-Joe Louis fight Tuesday night, beginning at 9 o'clock. The blow-by-blow description will be given by Clem McCarthy, the NBC sports announcer, and Edwin C. Hill has been assigned to describe the scene and the between the rounds happenings. McCarthy reported the Baer-Louis fight on the NBC networks in 1935 and last year, the Schmeling-Louis bout.

In addition to the network broadcasts, which will also come over the WEAF, WJZ and Mutual networks and KWK, the fight will be put on the air by the big Eastern short wave stations for reception in Europe and Latin-America.

Descriptions of the Poughkeepsie Regatta may be carried by three networks Tuesday afternoon. The NBC announced some time ago that it would broadcast the races by means of a "special set-up" with Graham McNamee, Bill Stern and Ben Grauer as announcers. The "set-up" was understood to include a transmitter in a blimp soaring above the course and microphones on the banks of the Hudson River. Then the CBS network announced that it would describe the race. Exclusively from the only microphone aboard the official observation train, which will parallel the course." The CBS is understood to have paid $1000 for the right to broadcast from the train. Anyway, the CBS also will have a transmitter on the judges' boat, and has scheduled descriptions by Ted Husing of the two-mile Freshman race at 1 p. m., the three-mile Junior race at 2 p. m. and the Varsity race at 3 p. m.

New Philco Sets Seen At Convention in East.

The sales personnel of the Artophone Corporation, Philco radio distributer, were expected to return today from a Philco convention held Thursday to yesterday at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. At the convention, the new 1938 Philco sets were shown for the first time and the advertising and merchandising plans explained. Advertising plans call for a substantial increase in use of newspaper space. The Philco campaign, it was said, will be of an unusual nature with special appeal to public interest.

Advance information, that the new Philco sets would have a number of new features, was borne out when the sets were displayed at the convention.

New Stromberg-Carlson Sets Shown to Dealers.

A complete line of new Stromberg-Carlson radio sets was shown to dealers the past week at the Coronado Hotel by Oval McCanne, factory representative, and the Graybar Electric Co., distributer.

In the line, are a number of attractive table models, some of them of unusual power and tone quality for their type; an extensive line of console sets, the larger of which have high fidelity and "acoustical labyrinth" cabinets for bass response and elimination of rumble and distortion; radio phonograph combinations, some of which have automatic record changers while one is designed to cover the widest possible tonal range and quality of reproduction; end table models with curved side, a coffee table model; a home (bar) set, and the "tel-ek-tor-et" remote control device whereby speaker and amplifier may be placed wherever one prefers while the tuner and volume control can be placed beside one's chair.

Among Stromberg-Carlson set features are "flash" tuning with automatic station finding of pre-selected stations, focal tuning indicator and special high fidelity speakers.

One of the large console models has two speakers, one for the deeper notes up to 400 cycles, the other carrying tones up to 10,000 cycles.

Motorola Home Sets To Be Shown Tomorrow.

New Motorola home radio sets as well as automobile sets will be shown to dealers at 7:30 tomorrow evening at the Coronado Hotel by the Disco Distributing Corporation.

McReynolds and Rozier to Be Guests of Honor at Friday Meeting.

The St. Louis League of Women Voters will give a luncheon in honor of State Senators Allen McReynolds of Carthage and George A. Rozier of Perryville Friday, at the Kings-Way Hotel.

Senators McReynolds and Rozier were members of the commission appointed by former Gov. Guy B. Park to survey the welfare needs of the State, and were joint authors of the unemployment compensation bill passed by the last Legislature. The League advocated the bills, as well as other legislation supported by the two Senators.

The Missouri League of Women Voters, and Kirkwood, Maplewood and Webster Groves Leagues will be joint hostesses at the luncheon. Mrs. Virgil Loeb will preside, and Miss Jeanne Blythe, president of the St. Louis League, and Mrs. J. Hardin Smith Jr., president of the Missouri League, will speak.

TAPESTRY 400 YEARS OLD FOR ART MUSEUM

Heirs Make Gifts From Collection of Late Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Faust.

A sixteenth century Gothic tapestry depicting a Biblical story and an Italian Renaissance table and bench have been presented to the City Art Museum by Mrs. Audrey Faust Wallace and Leicester Busch Faust in memory of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Faust.

Said to have been woven in Brussels more than 400 years ago, the tapestry represents three scenes in the Biblical story of David and Bathsheba as described in the eleventh and twelfth chapters of II Samuels.

In the upper left corner David is shown giving to Bathsheba's husband, Uriah, the letter that instructed Joab to place Uriah in the forefront of battle so that he might "be smitten and die." At the right Uriah is delivering the letter to Joab.

The center and lower part of the composition portray the unknown artist's conception of the Court of David. Bathsheba and David stand penitently with folded hands, receiving Nathan's rebuke in his prophecy, "The sword shall never depart from thine house; because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife."

Predominating colors of blue, red, green and yellow are skillfully blended by hatching, that is, fine weaving to produce the effect of shading. Measurements of the tapestry are 11 feet, 10 inches by 21 feet 5 inches.

In style it is related to a set of 10 tapestries depicting the story of David and Bathsheba, which are in the Cluny Museum and are said to be the work of a master identified only as "Maitre Philippe." With the bench and table it is on display in the Italian gallery at the left of the city museum's entrance.

The three objects were in the art collection of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Faust. He was a member of the museum's Board of Control from 1923 until his death last year and in recent years had served as vice-president.

ART MUSEUM GIVES OUT SUMMER PROGRAM

Gallery Talks to Be Given by Miss Powell, Miss Ambler and Miss Chamberlain.

The program for the summer series of gallery talks at City Art Museum in Forest Park was announced yesterday by Miss Mary Powell, supervisor of education.

On Monday mornings at 11 o'clock, beginning tomorrow, Miss Jaquelin Ambler will discuss recent acquisitions of the museum. Tomorrow's talk will be devoted to the statue of St. Catherine by Antonello Gagini. Subjects for later talks will be Persian pottery, American furniture, a portrait by Henry Fantin-Latour, a Buddhistic stele, an etching by Pablo Picasso, John Steuart Curry's painting, "The Mississippi," and an African bronze head.

On Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock Miss Powell will speak on personalities in art. These talks will be repeated on Friday mornings at the same hour. Portraits in the museum's collection will be used to show how artists, in successive periods, revealed the personalities of their subjects.

On Thursday mornings at 11 o'clock Miss Jessie B. Chamberlain will talk on "The Artist's Place in the World." She will discuss the lives of artists in their physical, social and creative aspects in periods from ancient Greece to the present day.

For children there will be a story hour at 11 o'clock Monday mornings conducted by Miss Chamberlain, which will be in the form of an imaginary trip around the world.

On Wednesday afternoons at 3 o'clock Miss Powell will tell stories to the children, to direct their observation of pictures and statues and improve their understanding of objects in the museum. These talks will be repeated on Friday afternoons at 3 o'clock.

Miss' Powell and Miss Ambler will alternate on Thursday mornings at 11 o'clock in a series of stories about heroes, old and new, suggested by objects in the museum's collection.

In connection with all the programs for children, the hour preceding the story period will be reserved for drawing from museum objects and for observation games. These, and all activities of the museum, are free to the public.

MINOR HOTEL OWNERS DRAFT PACT WITH UNION

Recognize A. F. of L. Affiliates and Agree to Increase Wages.

Recognition of five American Federation of Labor unions as sole agencies for collective bargaining and wage increases for about 1200 employes are provided for in an agreement to be signed this week by the unions and the City Hotel Association, embracing 35 class B, C and D hotels.

Announcement that an agreement had been reached by negotiating committees was made yesterday by L. F. Winter, president of the association, and William M. Brandt, secretary of the Central Trades & Labor Union. In general the agreement follows provisions of a recent contract made by the unions with the St. Louis Hotel Association, covering 28 class A and B hotels, following a strike. It is for three years and provides for the following wage increases Brandt stated: Bartenders, 10 per cent; cooks, 20 per cent; waiters, 30 per cent; miscellaneous employes, 22 per cent, and waitresses, 100 per cent. The hotels are to furnish and maintain uniforms worn by employes.

Hotels are classified according to size and prices, class A and B hotels including the larger and more expensive commercial and residential establishments. Brandt announced that an agreement had also been reached with the Claridge Hotel, which is not a member of any association.

Women to Hold Excursion.

The Woman's Chamber of Commerce will hold an all-day Mississippi River excursion on the steamer President Wednesday. A card party and other activities are planned by the committee in charge, of which Mrs. Clarence Newman is chairman.

Carol Carpenter Bows to Society At Garden Party

First Debutante of 1937-38 Season Greeted by 500 Guests at Home of Her Mother.

FIVE hundred guests, ranging from contemporaries of her grandparents to debutantes of next season, greeted Miss Carol Carpenter Friday at her debut party—the first formal function on the 1937 calendar. It was a garden reception, one of the few late spring parties with as long a guest list, to be given in St. Louis in recent years.

Miss Carpenter is the daughter of Mrs. Kenneth G. Carpenter, who entertained at the home of her mother, Mrs. Richard E. Perry, 6358 Alexander drive, with whom the Carpenters live.

An elaborate marquee for protection against possible rain but with its sides open except for white, fern-covered lattices, was built across the lawn adjoining the house. From its green top hung multi-colored Japanese lanterns, which were lighted after sundown. Its latticed sides achieved the effect of a floral bower with bowls of blossoms sent to Miss Carpenter arranged against the green. At intervals the trellis had been cut away and window boxes filled with blue delphinium and yellow daisies were silhoutted in the openings.

At one side stretched a long buffet table decorated at either side by blue jars of delphinium. At the other stood the receiving line, Mrs. Carpenter, her mother, George Oliver Carpenter Jr., her brother-in-law, and the debutante.

The guest of honor wore a simple garden frock of white marquisette, its flaring skirt sweeping into three bias folds at the hem, and a fichu collar crossed and secured at the back by a turquoise blue grosgrain bow and long streamers. A cluster of yellow and blue flowers were caught at the V point of the bodice. Her hat was a broad brimmed natural leghorn banded in blue ribbon tied flat at one side. Mrs. Carpenter's gown was of pearl gray chiffon, with which she wore a wide wine red straw hat and matching slippers. Mrs. Perry wore black and white chiffon.

After greeting the host and hostesses, guests emerged onto the open lawn, a tall hedge of poplar trees at the back, in which glass-topped tables, gay umbrellas and garden chairs had been arranged. An orchestra played on a raised platform at one side. Guests began arriving shortly after 5 o'clock (the hours were 5 to 7), and the subdebutantes remained late for dancing.

Miss Carpenter chose the late spring instead of the more formal fall season in which to be presented in order to be free to continue her studies at Pine Manor, Wellesley, Mass., in September. She will leave tomorrow to visit friends in the East and will be with them at the Yale-Harvard boat races at New London, Conn., next week. Later she will join her mother and grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Oliver Carpenter, 12 Portland place, at their summer home at North Haven, Me. On Christmas night her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter Jr., will give a dinner dance in her honor at the St. Louis Country Club.

Miss Carpenter formerly attended Mary Institute and the Madeira School in Washington.

Last night she shared honors with Miss Nancy Houser and Miss Katherine Gratz Randolph, also debutantes of next season, at a dinner dance given at the St. Louis Country Club's Saturday night party by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Francis.

Parties to Precede Little Symphony

INFORMAL entertaining will precede the opening concert of the Little Symphony Friday night. Small dinners will be given by Miss Martha Love and Miss Frances Conant, both members of the committee, at the homes of their respective parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward K. Love and Mr. and Mrs. George K. Conant. Preceding the last report meeting at the Kings-Way Hotel Wednesday night, Miss Adelaide Mahaffey entertained a group for dinner informally.

The concert series, under the direction of Hans Lange, as has been told, will be given on the Washington University quadrangle where a stage for the orchestra has been improvised in front of the library building, instead of at the John Burroughs School.

Officers of the Symphony are Robert B. Smith, president; Mrs. Fordyce, vice president; and Arnold H. Maremont, secretary treasurer. The Executive Committee, headed by Miss Conant, consists of Miss Frederick, Mrs. C. Edward Hermann, Miss Love, Mr. Putzel, William Julius Polk Jr., Mrs. Adele Sharpe, Mr. and Mrs. Sherman, Miss Mary Bolland Taussig, Mrs. William B. Summer Travel Plans Made By St. Louisans

European Trips, and Resorts to North, East and West Attract Holiday Groups During Next Few Months.

MANY St. Louisans, remembering last summer's three months of almost constant temperature of above 100 degrees, have left for northern, eastern and western resorts or travel abroad. Departures to summer homes at popular Michigan, Massachusetts, or New Hampshire resorts began early in May this year. A few have returned home after conditioning their cottages and plan to leave soon for the season.

The Paris Exposition, the Coronation season in London, the Salzburg Music festivals in Austria, and the Wagnerian Opera in Bayreuth, Bavaria, are perhaps important factors in the heavy travel of St. Louisans abroad now and the next few months. More probably will travel in Europe this summer than for several years.

Among those families already abroad are Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Cushman and their young daughter, Miss Catherine. They plan to tour the continent by automobile and on their return in the fall Miss Cushman will be presented to society. The Frederick B. Ewing family with their son, Frederick B. Jr., and daughter, Miss Mary Louise, will divide their time between Germany and their home at Florence, Italy. Mr. and Mrs. Elzey G. Burkham and their daughter, Miss Lois, and two sons, sailed last week aboard the Europa to be gone until the middle of September.

Miss Cynthia Davis, daughter of Dwight F. Davis of Washington, formerly of St. Louis, is in Italy visiting Countess Hamilton, fiancee of Bartholomeo Migone, member of the Foreign Office in Rome, and formerly first secretary of the Italian Legation in Washington. Miss Davis will be joined this summer by her sister, Miss Helen, and the two girls, with Miss Anne Chilton, daughter of Sir Henry Getty Chilton, British Minister to the Vatican, and Lady Chilton, will travel along the Dalmatian Coast.

Miss May and Miss Edna Gamble are among St. Louisans already abroad as is Mrs. Richard T. Shelton, who with her daughter, Mrs. Howard Nelson Rubien of Paris, will travel on the continent.

Sailing yesterday on the Deutschland were Mrs. Alice Orthwein Heissler and her daughter, Miss Helen, and the day before on the Bremen were Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Williams.

North Cape cruises the last of June are attracting many St. Louisans this season. Such a holiday is planned by Mrs. Carl Langenberg and her daughter, Miss Bonnie; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Magnus and their daughters, Mrs. Busch Mangus and Miss Miquette; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stanley Bland; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Marx, Mrs. Ralph Simpkins, her daughter, Miss Frances; Mrs. Thomas S. McPheeters.

Among those who will leave the latter part of the month are: Mr. and Mrs. Edgar F. Peters and their daughters, Elizabeth Ann and Harriet, on the Bremen, June 30; Miss Kathleen Wallace, Miss Mary Ann Davie and Miss Katherine Salkey, chaperoned by Miss Mary Jane Roach, on the Rex, four days earlier than the Bremen; Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Cullen and their niece, Miss Helen Van Matre, on board the Normandie, June 30.

Saturday Dean and Mrs. Sidney E. Sweet sail from San Francisco for two months in Japan and China. They will be joined by their son, Sidney Sweet Jr., who is teaching in Chang-Cha, China, for a visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bakewell III will spend a month in Ireland and England, returning home the latter part of next month. This month is the time set for the departure of Miss Frances Bates and her brother, William Maffitt Bates, children of Mr. and Mrs. William Maffitt Bates.

A party of St. Louisans sailing on the Washington June 28 will include Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bailey Jamison, Mr. and Mrs. George Bullock and Mr. and Mrs. James L. Westlake.

Mr. and Mrs. Leicester Busch Faust will sail the latter part of the month with their two young daughters for a motor tour of Germany, France, England and Holland, spending the greater part of the time in Germany where Mr. Faust has relatives.

The group of students at Country Day School who will spend their vacation walking through Germany, under the direction of Roy Battenberg, German instructor at the school, and Daniel McCluney, student at Washington University and nephew of Mrs. James McCluney, will include: Forster and Briggs Hoffmann Jr., sons of Mr. and Mrs. Briggs A. Hoffmann; Edwin T. Stanard Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Stanard; and Henry G. Keeler Jr.

Silver snuff boxes, upon Mrs. Clark's suggestion, like that used by Dolly Madison, were the favors, fried chicken contest was held under her direction when she challenged the wives of other legislators to compete with her for the title of "The Best Fried Chicken Cook in Congress."

As a director of Thomas Jefferson Commission that saved the home of Jefferson from private ownership, Mrs. Clark paid a visit to Monticello in 1926.

Mrs. Clark retired from Washington after the death of Speaker Clark in 1921 and passed much of her time at their home, Honeyshuck, Bowling Green, Mo.

Last winter Mrs. Clark was at the home of her daughter, wife of the owner and publisher of the New Orleans Item-Tribune. Mrs. Thomson is remembered here as Genevieve Champ Clark.

Two of Mrs. Clark's children, Anne Hamilton Clark and Champ Clark II, died in infancy.

Miss Christine Owen is probably the most traveled member of Washington society. She has just returned from a world cruise. On this cruise she visited Japan, Egypt, Siam and India.

On this cruise with her was Mrs. Joseph Kerrigan, of Oyster Bay, L. I., formerly Mrs. Summer Welles, first wife of the Under-Secretary of State and daughter of Mrs. Horatio Nelson Slater, of Boston. On their way home, they stopped in Arizona to view the Grand Canyon.

Mrs. Ormond Lawson Johnson, formerly Mrs. Lyman Kendal of Washington, will return to Washington this winter from London, it is reported.

Dinner was served at small tables set up about the grounds, and an orchestra played for dancing on a tarpaulin stretched across the tennis courts.

Originating as a small invitation affair four years ago, the canoe club's annual party has developed into a summer institution. Last year almost 1000 guests, including debutantes and young married couples and their parents, attended, and advance ticket sales indicated that this would be a record season.

The Meramec Canoe Club was founded in 1904, and its roster of members includes social and business leaders. Funds from the carnivals erase the annual deficit and help to refurnish the clubhouse.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 19.

THE Princeton University Triangle Club, undergraduate dramatic organization, presents the last performance tonight of "Take It Away!", the club's musical comedy of the 1936-1937 season. The show played in St. Louis Dec. 28 at the Municipal Auditorium, when the group was on its holiday tour. Tonight's presentation is part of the activities preceding commencement Tuesday.

Several St. Louis students have contributed to the success of the comedy, taking part in both the dramatic and administrative activities of the club. Edward A. Wilbur Boardman Jones Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur B. Jones, has been business manager of the club for the last year and also has appeared in Triangle productions. He is one of the two seniors on the class day presentation committee, it was announced yesterday by John N. Irwin II of Keokuk, Ia., senior class president. The committee will make its annual humorous awards on class day, this Monday, as a part of the university's 190th graduation activities. Mr. Jones, a member of Cap and Gown, upper-class eating club, and of the Theatre Intime, was chosen by his classmates as one of the four best-natured men in the class.

THERE'S A LITTLE BIT OF ALL THE WORLD IN WISCONSIN

Wisconsin is truly a state of varied color and interest. Cities as modern as tomorrow contrast with virgin forests where time stands still.

There are hundreds of miles of wide sand beach along Lake Michigan and hundreds of miles of rugged rocky cliffs along the Lake Superior shore. You can thrill to the grandeur of the mighty Mississippi and the beauty of the Apostle Islands. The tranquility of pastoral country, rolling hills and quiet valleys, Indian camps, quaint fishing villages—you'll find them all in Wisconsin.

In this state of 7,000 lakes you will find world-famous fishing waters. Incomparable summer climate gives added zest to your favorite outdoor sport. Thousands of families make Wisconsin their summer recreation land, for sport, for rest, for play. We'd like to have you come, too.

TROOPS TO ENTRAIN FOR SCOUT JAMBOREE

Four Units to See New York Before Joining Others in Washington.

Four of six St. Louis boy scout jamboree units will entrain Friday for the National Jamboree to be held in Washington June 30 until July 9. The scouts first will visit New York, Philadelphia, and Atlantic City.

Immediately after the jamboree, two of the troops will embark for the World Jamboree at Vogelenzang, Holland, in July. Two other St. Louis units, composed of sea scouts, will leave for Washington next Monday.

The St. Louis lads who leave Friday will be joined by scouts from Bonne Terre, Cape Girardeau, Des Moines, and Sioux City, Ia. Jack Wright and Charles H. Mills of the St. Louis Council will be in charge.

Two locol scouts will have all trip expenses paid for winning an essay contest sponsored by a downtown department store on "What I Get Out of Scouting." They are Raymond Laux Jr. of Troop 115 and Robert Harmon of Troop 174.

More than 20,000 invitations were mailed Wednesday from National Scout Headquarters in New York to scout officials and others throughout the country, asking them to visit the scout camp and the jamboree's local and national exhibits.

The invitation list includes Cabinet officers, members of Congress, the diplomatic corps, Governors of the 48 states, Mayors of principal cities, and departmental officials of the Federal Government.

Camp Officials Are Named

The two camps operated by the St. Louis Council, Camp Irondale and Lion's Den Camp, open today. Seven troops have registered for the initial session at Irondale; four will quarter at the other camp.

Names of the complete staff for Irondale, announced yesterday, are:

Camp director, Sam C. Reaves; assistant director in charge of business, Guy Short; director of activities, LeRoy Lane; Catholic chaplain, the Rev. George Hilke; Protestant chaplain, the Rev. H. F. Baumgaertel; camp physician, Dr. Louis G. Jekel; hospital orderly, Clarence Stepp.

H. Max Nusser is camp director at Lion's Den and Harry Seimer is his assistant. John Evans is clerk of the camp and Sid Newcomb, truck man. Other staff positions are to be filled tomorrow.

To Inspect Sea Scouts.

Sea scouts who will attend the National Jamboree will be inspected tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock at the sea scout base, Lake Creve Coeur. After the inspection, final races of the spring series for an annual ribbon award will be run off. Leading scorers are the "Polaris" and the "Sea Lion" with only four points separating them in the X-boat class.

National scout membership has reached a new high with the rolls showing 1,075,423 cubs, scouts and adult leaders, according to an announcement in New York by Dr. James E. West, chief scout executive.

The total Dec. 31, 1936, was 1,069,729, a gain of 5694 in four months. The present membership shows a gain of 59,500 boys and leaders over the roster of April 30, 1936. Dr. West said there had been consistent gains registered for the last 27 years.

Troop Notes.

Courts of honor were held last week by Troop 128, Church of the Ascension; Troop 308, Webster Groves Episcopal Church; Troop 333, Iyndover School, Maplewood; Troop 304, Webster Groves Presbyterian Church; Troop 301, Webster Groves Congregational Church; and Troop 90, Shaare Emeth Temple.

A bridge of honor was held Wednesday by the SSS. Sea Lion.

Girl Scouts.

Four girls are to be awarded the golden eaglet, highest girl scout award. They are Miss Martha Louise Weingart, 5575 Cabanne avenue; Miss Ruth Diefenbronn, 2205A McCausland avenue; Miss Lenore Bertram, 3523A McKean avenue, and Miss Ruth Thym, 4234 Arsenal street.

Miss Weingart, a member of Troop 89, will receive her pin this afternoon at 3 o'clock during a garden party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Novoson, 7501 Wayne avenue. The time has not been announced for the others.

The girl scout first class badge, the highest ranking badge which can be earned by an active girl scout, has been presented to 20 girls of the St. Louis area during the last month.

Eighteen brownies are now enrolled in the new Brownie Pack 11 which meets at Kingdom House, 1102 Morrison avenue. Miss Eleanor Grissom is in charge.

FUNERAL OF ANTI-FASCISTS

Demonstration at Burial of Pair Murdered in France.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, June 19.—Anti-Fascists held a demonstration today as funeral services were held for Carlo and Nello Roselli, Italian anti-Fascists murdered near Bagnoles, France, last week. There were disturbances, but police restored order.

Several thousand marched in a procession to Pere Lachaise Cemetery for the burial services. They carried banners and moved between crowds of spectators who wept, gave the People's Front clenched fist salute, shouted hostility to Fascism and sang the "International." Authorities have failed to find the killers.

THE FALL AND RISE OF 'BEAU' BELL

The Browns' Rookie From Texas Who Returned From Exile in the Minors and Became a League Leader in Two Years.

By W. [illegible] McGOOGAN
Of the Post-Dispatch Sports Staff.

ROY "BEAU" BELL, an outfielder with the St. Louis Browns, was feeling pretty chipper on a morning during the latter part of July in 1935. He had been fielding well and hitting in a style which seemed to him to be of real major league caliber. His average was over the .300 mark, that percentage which is supposed to demonstrate real big league ability and be the sign that a player can stick in the big time.

He was a sadly disappointed youth that day, though, when he was called into the office of the club and handed transportation to San Antonio, Texas, the Browns' Texas League farm.

Now the ways of the major leagues are sometimes devious, sometimes mean. They have a knack of sending out a boy to a minor league, not because they don't think he's good enough for the majors, but because some minor league connection requires strengthening, and if the player can be sent out on option, without danger of losing title to him, it may be done.

Bell thought bitterly, as the train rolled on its way to San Antonio, that was what had happened to him. And he was not in a pleasant frame of mind.

Again he reflected maybe that wasn't it. Perhaps there was something wrong with his play. Maybe his hitting was not all that was desired on the part of an outfielder, those guardians of the fences, who are supposed to pack most of the punch of a big league club.

"Well, if a meager .300 is not enough, I'll hit more next season," he reasoned, "then they'll have to keep me."

That was a wise idea, but it is one thing to resolve to hit better, another thing to do it.

What could he do to help his batting? That was the question he turned over and over in his mind, instead of spending the time in assailing fate.

Then he remembered that the manager of the Browns was Rogers Hornsby, the greatest right-handed batter the game had ever known, in the opinion of keen observers of baseball. He had opportunities of observing Rogers in action.

WHAT did Hornsby do at the plate that Bell didn't do? Roy considered that question and determined that whereaa he (Bell) stood with his left foot back of the right as he faced the plate, a position known to the trade generally as "standing with one foot in the bucket," Hornsby advanced the left one toward the plate and kept his right one back. He pivoted on the left and swung into a pitch faster, almost, than the eye could follow.

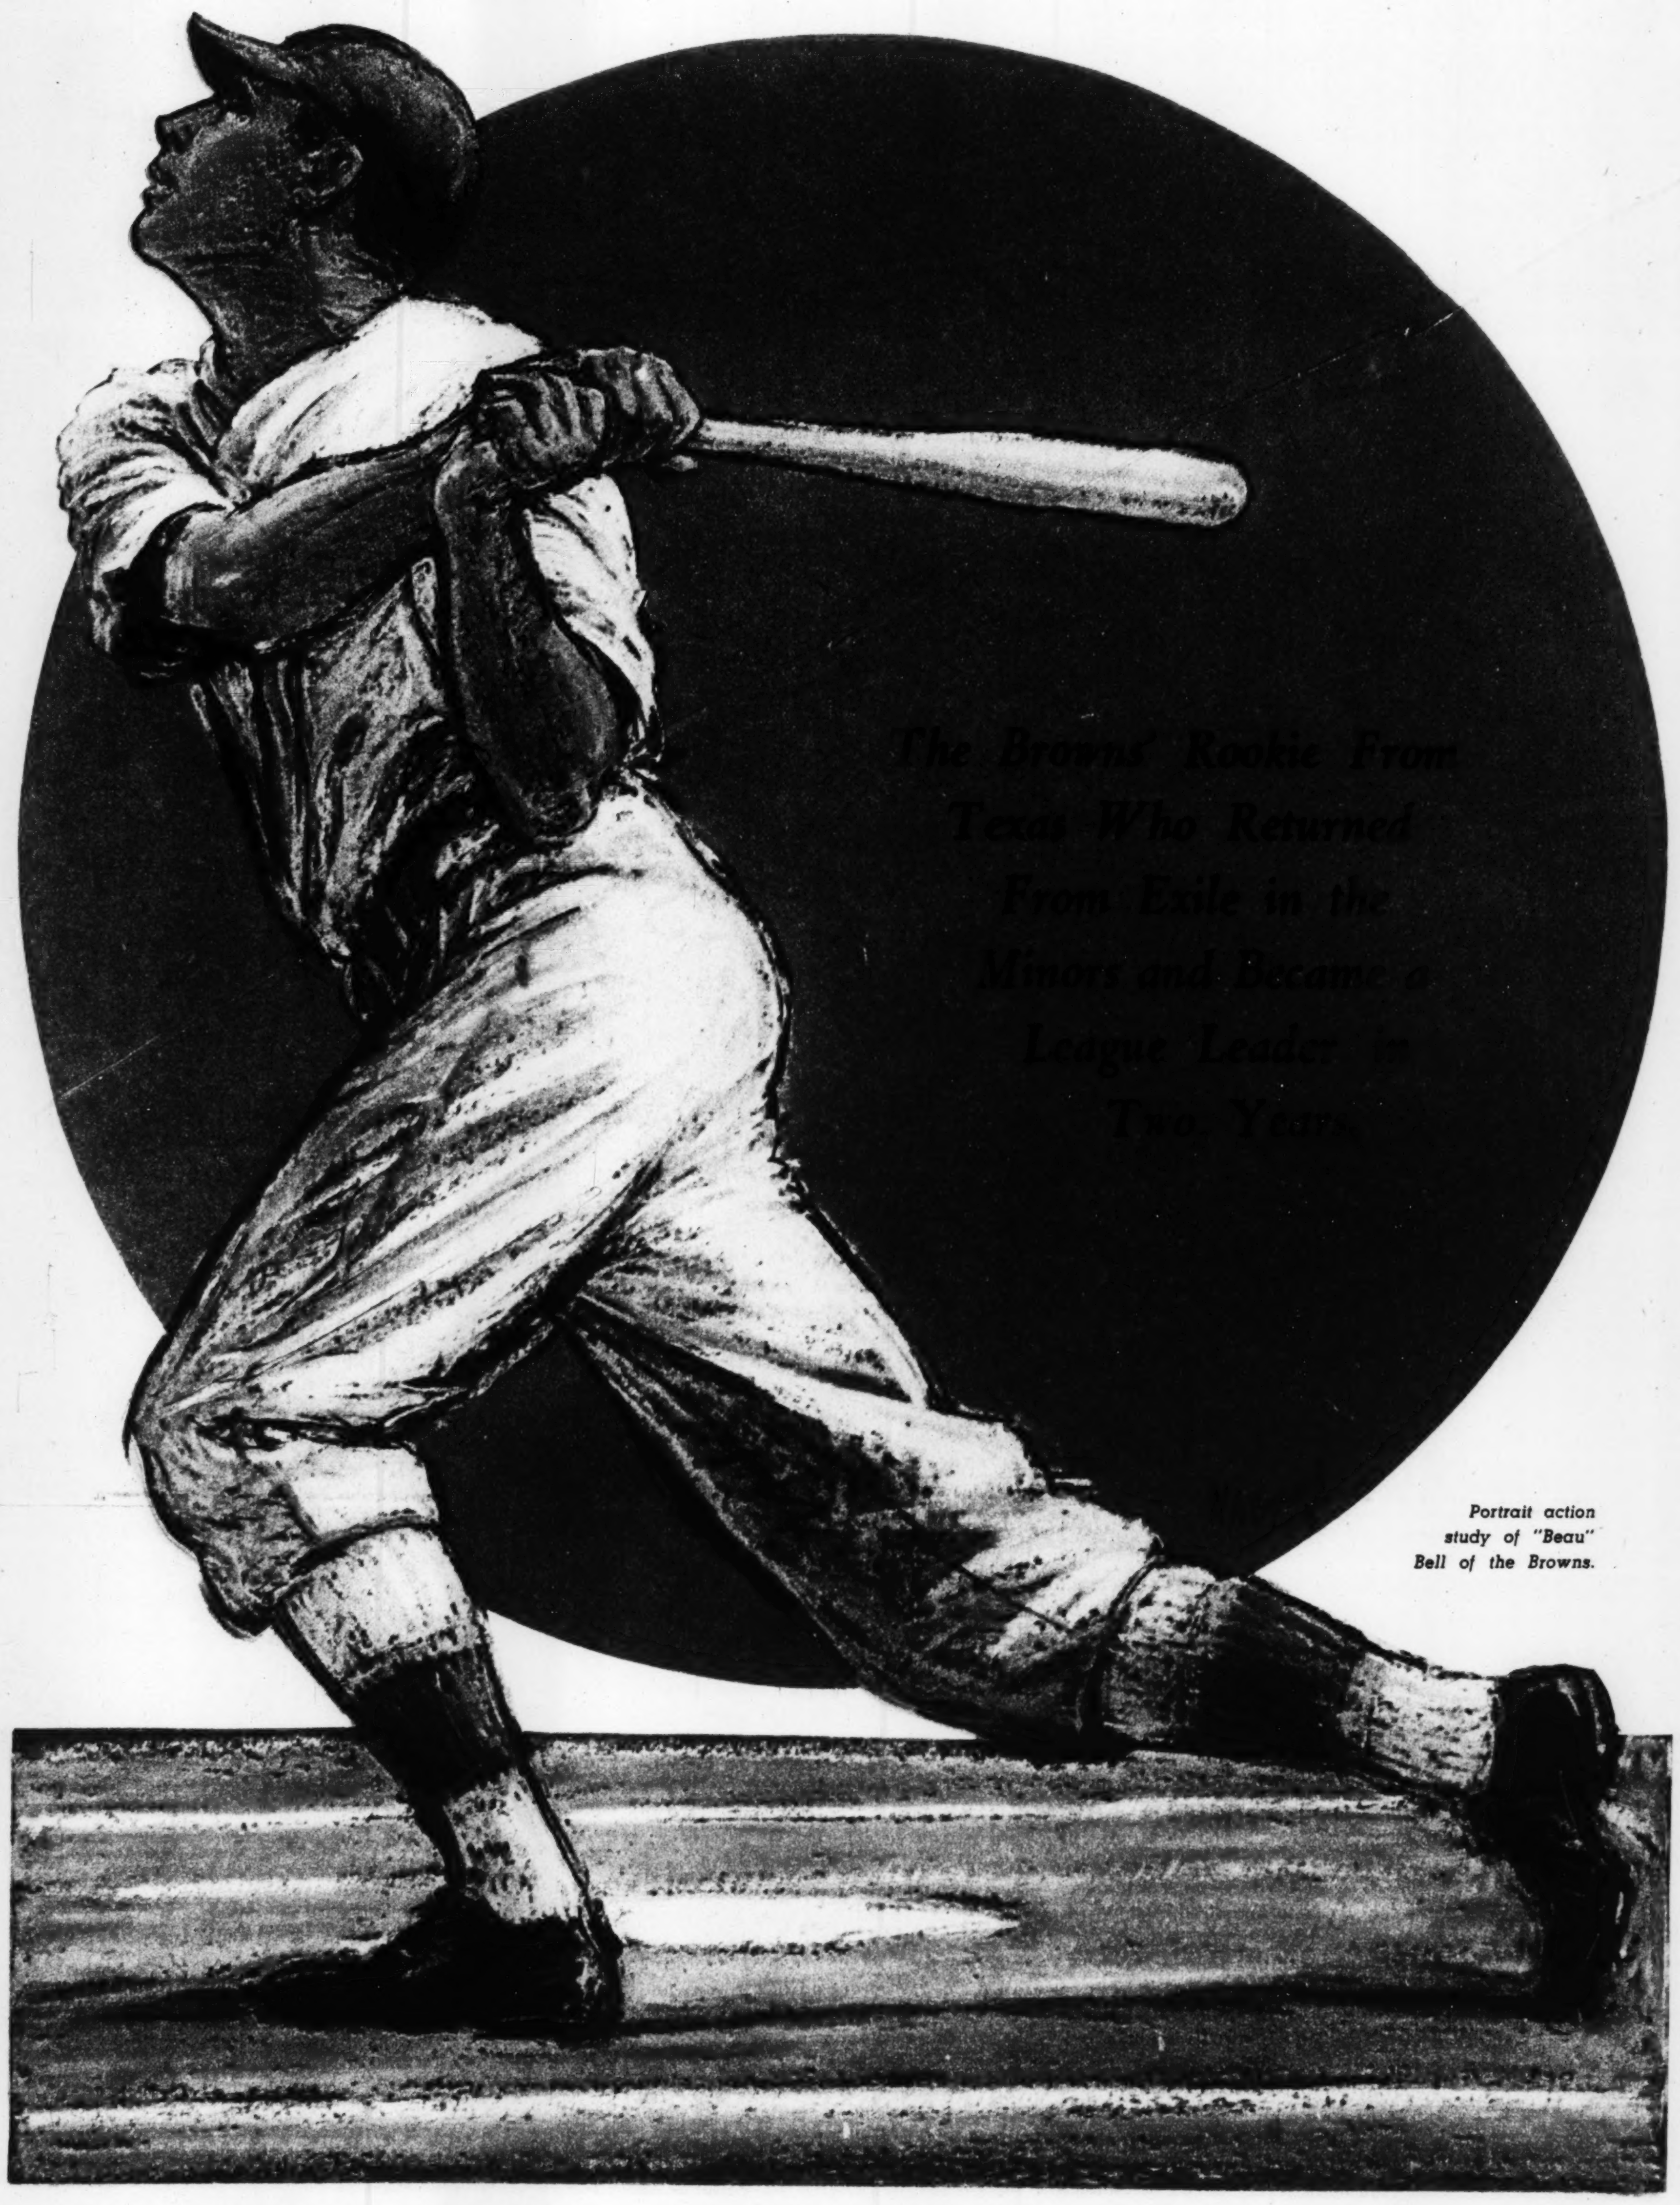
"All right," Bell mused, "I'll try that."

So he did in his games with the San Antonio club, and he succeeded so well that he was called back to the Browns in the spring of 1936 for another trial in the big leagues.

He warmed the fences so thoroughly in spring camp that there was no keeping him out of the lineup when the season opened, and he had the satisfaction of hearing Hornsby say to him, "You are the most improved ball player I have ever seen." Rare praise indeed from the taciturn leader of the Browns, who is sparing of his pats on the back, not so sparing in caustic remarks about the shortcomings of his men.

As everyone knows, 1936 was a lean year for the Browns. They struggled all season to keep out of the cellar, the club was owned and operated by an estate and things generally were far from cheerful.

Bell paid no attention to that, however. He simply sawed wood, and when the final averages were compiled for the season it was found that he had batted to the tune of .344, a better mark by some 17 points than the highly publicized recruit of the New York Yankees, Joe Di Maggio, and better than most of the other first year men in the game.



Portrait action study of "Beau" Bell of the Browns.

Then came the transfer of the club to the new owners, a syndicate of St. Louis business men headed by Donald L. Barnes and William O. De Witt. They purchased the club from the estate of the late Phil Ball and went about the business of signing their men for the season of 1937.

Now Bell had reasoned that he had played for little enough in 1936, as it really was his first full season in the American League, but he expected a big reward for 1937. He found, however, that the new owners were proceeding cautiously and that they would not or could not afford to pay him what he wanted.

He held out until long after the training season had started. Then capitulated for a sum, it is said, nearer the figure offered by the team than what he wanted.

Another disappointment, but again the well ordered mind of Bell, a graduate of Texas A. and M. College, came to his rescue. Once more he reasoned the thing out, instead of sulking in his tent. He started pounding that ball at the start of this season just where he left off at the end of 1936.

As a result he has been among the leaders of the league since the season opened, being tied for second place in hitting when the averages were released for a recent week.

Bell hits for extras bases, too, particularly doubles. He also hits a fair number of home runs, but not so many as you might think for such a prolific slugger.

"He hits the ball as hard as anyone in the game," Hornsby said the other day, "and if he had more loft to his swing he would be right up there among the leaders in home runs."

Bell doesn't go in for homers particularly, though. He just tries to follow the ball with each pitch, hit it squarely on the nose and let the horsehide stop where it may. Not so long ago, though, a situation arose where it was a home run or nothing. The Browns were a run behind, two were out in the last of the ninth. He swung and pulled the ball into the leftfield bleachers, tying the score and the Browns went on to win in the tenth.

It is his ability to follow the ball closely with his eyes to which Bell attributes his success, as much as to his change in stance to conform closely to that used by Hornsby, "or maybe it was the change which enabled me to follow the pitches more closely," he put it.

In any event, his thought while he is at the plate is to pick out a good pitch and nail it. If the ball is pitched inside, that is, close to him, he tries to hit it to left field. If it is pitched on the outside of the plate, at a point farthest from him, but still a good ball, he tries to hit it to right field. One right down the alley, oh, man, he just hits that one with all the strength of his arms and puts his 190 pounds of heft behind it.

"And wasn't it a grand sight to see Bell on first base today?" queried an opposing pitcher. "You know he only got a single and every other time we've looked at that guy this year he's been on second or third."

Bell doesn't try to guess if a pitcher is going to throw a curve ball or a fast one or a slow one. He just follows the ball with his eye as it leaves the pitcher's hand and takes care of it accordingly.

He is a quiet chap, not given to arguing with umpires nor to ballyhooing himself. He just gives the best he has in him every day.

"I have never been put out of a game," he said, "and I don't expect I ever will. Although you can't tell about that. I might get mad some day and say something to an umpire, but I doubt it. I figure the best system is to keep your mouth shut and play ball."

Two inches more than six feet tall, with light brown hair, Bell is a handsome chap, but at 28 years of age he remains single.

You might be deceived by that nickname, "Beau." It really has nothing to do with his looks, nor to his being a "ladies' man." It was tagged on him in his youth when he used to help deliver the mail around his home town, then Belleville, Texas, a town, incidentally, named for his family.

IT SEEMS that for some reason he contracted the name of "Bohunk," which was subsequently shortened to "Bo," then changed to "Beau" when he reached college. It has stuck to him since.

Bell never had ambitions, even in college, to be anything but a ballplayer, although he did take a course in physical education with a view to becoming a coach. He took an interest in basketball and played it along with baseball. He coached some basketball after he left school and still follows the game as a spectator in the winter home at his home, New Braunfels, Texas.

His particular winter avocation, though, is golf, a game he thoroughly enjoys during the off season and in which he has become so proficient that he has broken 80 on occasion.

During the season, picture shows, perhaps a little game of cards are his only diversion, but he is not one of the perpetual sitters-in at the card table who are a part of most ball clubs.

He really likes and thinks most of his job in right field, a position he has played most of the time he has been in the game, and he likes to hit every time he goes to the plate. Not that he sets any particular goal in hitting, he just does his best for a good sock at the ball each time.

And there are those who say he will develop into one of the greatest outfielders in the game in a few more seasons. Certainly the St. Louis fans are more than satisfied with him and only wish that the Browns had a few more Bells.

PLANES for PRIESTS WHO WORK in the WILDERNESS

Father Paul Schulte, Who Founded the Missionary Vehicular Association, Establishes an Aerial Mission in the Hudson Bay Country.

An Indian baby of the Cree tribe.

THE ordinary missionary, one suspects, takes secret pride in the choice hardships and vicissitudes of his lot. He finds intrinsic virtue enhanced by the difficulties under which it is practiced. He copes doggedly with privation, wrings ascetic joy from the knowledge of sacrifice to lonely and desolate vigils, courts discomfort.

Evidently the contemporary Church Militant doesn't consider such wanton asceticism entirely appropriate. Canoes were all right for Pere Marquette. The present-day evangelist need not be gratuitously pedestrian in a world humming with rapid transit. Hence the Reverend Father Paul Schulte is probably a fair example of what the Roman Catholic Church looks for in a missionary.

There was never a more vigorous and venturesome apostle of the Word. Today he is in New York preparing a whirlwind speaking tour of America. Before he starts off, he may take a quick flight to Hudson Bay. When he lectures, he will illustrate his work with expertly made moving pictures. He will doubtless make use of the radio.

Father Schulte is a new-style Loyola, pragmatic and practical, an executive who bends every device of modern mechanics to the uses of his high-pressure piety. He is a member of the Oblate Brotherhood of Cologne, Germany, and founder of the Missionary Vehicular Association, which won Pope Pius' blessing in 1927.

Father Schulte (not to be confused with his namesake, who was just appointed Bishop of Leavenworth Diocese, Kansas) is a German veteran of the World War. He served as a member of a crack grenadier regiment, was twice decorated and twice wounded, finally served one year as a pilot in the Imperial Air Corps.

Ordained in 1922, he was sent to Africa with his bosom friend, the Reverend Otto Fuhrmann. The latter's unnecessary death of a tropical fever three years later roused Father Schulte's indignation. If missionaries traveled by modern transport methods instead of trekking through jungles on safari, he felt certain his friend would have been saved at a nearby hospital.

A lithe, handsome intense figure of a man, Father Schulte has devoted his energies since then to making airplanes, tractor autos, radio and all the mechanical facilities of modern life available to remote missions.

The budget of MIVA is several hundred thousand dollars a year. Hundreds of high-powered vehicles operated by trained pilots and mechanics have been distributed to missions in Central and South America, the Arctic, Africa, India and China.

The founder has pilot's licenses in virtually every country touched by missionary activity, flies his own plane, makes his own movies and acts in general as pressure promotion manager.

HE SPENDS much time in the field. Last winter he explored the possibilities of consolidating mechanical services for the missions of the Hudson Bay region, finally selecting Fort Albany on James Bay as the location for a radio station that will proselytize all Canada and serve as a means of communication in winter emergencies.

Backed by 75,000 members in Germany and less imposing numbers in seven or eight other countries, MIVA promises to set the pace for all missionary work by the Roman Catholic Church in the near future. Father Schulte's methods are those of advertising and promotion men in commercial fields. He held high mass aboard the dirigible Hindenburg during one of her early voyages and boasts he is the only priest who has said mass in the air.

He likes to be called The Flying Padre. Private airlines such as he set up in Southwest Africa and New Guinea will probably be founded in Canada during the next year or two. Hence his present tour.

Yolande enters the subway at Charenton

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

PARIS.

A SUBWAY'S roar is anesthetic. One walks out of the bright day into cool sanitary tunnels of white and blue tile. Animation is suspended. Habit supplants thought. The passenger yields himself up to the machine. The echoing roar of the train and the shrill squeak of steel wheels and brakes swallow up all preoccupations. The past ended at the station where one entered. The future will begin at the station where the machinery of habit tells one to get off. Life commences again when one emerges into the street once more.

Such is a week-day subway. But on the Sunday of Pentecost week-end there is a difference. Passengers are fewer and wisps of holiday gaiety are carried down the steps. There is even occasional laughter. And there is a faint sense of loneliness, an intangible melancholy in the vacuous journey under a festive city. . . .

Imagine the southeast terminal of the Metro on Pentecost Sunday. The line ends near the outskirts of the Bois de Vincennes—one of the outlying parks. It is the end of a bright day and the park has been filled with picnic parties—families of workers and shop keepers basking in the warm spring sun. Monday is another holiday and the atmosphere is carefree. But there is a late-Sunday-afternoon weariness in the air as crowds begin to straggle back to Paris for light suppers. The red wine they had for lunch is wearing off and the second-class carriages of the subway will soon be crowded with rosy-cheeked men and women and cranky children.

At a little before 6:24 the bus, which is an extension of the Metro line, draws up at the Charenton terminal. A rather fiercely pretty, gaily dressed young woman with very red lips and a red ribbon like the ribbon of the Legion d'Honneur steps down, walks briskly across the pavement and enters the station. She has on a flowered dress and a picture hat and she has the mock smartness of the Parisian working girl on holiday. She has on a flowered dress and a picture hat and she has the mock smartness of the Parisian working girl on holiday. In keeping with the festive air she carries down the stairs with her, she buys herself a first-class ticket and seats herself in the seat beside the door of an empty first-class carriage. A moment later the automatic door closes silently behind her, the train trembles and starts off, roaring down the black tunnel.

Just 60 seconds later the subway pulls into the Porte Doree station. A crowd pushes into the second-class cars. And the three laughing young women and the gay young man in a medical officer's uniform who enter the first-class car stop short just beyond the entrance. For the young woman who was sitting beside the door has been thrown out of her seat and lies prostrate across the floor. A blotch of blood stains the back of her gay dress and a knife handle protrudes from a point at the base of her neck.

THE four horrified passengers, gay companions a moment ago, rush down the platform and have the train held. The police are summoned. An excited curious crowd half circles the door. The victim is still alive. But while the station master is trying to question her, she dies.

Such was the mysterious death of Mme. Yolande Laetitia Toureaux—one of the most bizarre and inexplicable murders in years. At this writing, almost a month after the event, there are still no pertinent clues, no established motives and no suspects. Police have turned the victim's life inside out, examined every incident with meticulous zeal. Some queer data have been turned up. But while they make the incident itself a little less implausible than it was before, really they explain nothing. Here are the facts of the case:

Mme. Toureaux's background was ordinary in the extreme. She was the daughter of an Italian farmer who was killed during the World War. In 1927 her mother, Mme. Nourissat, decided to leave the village of Ovace on the French border, Northeastern Italy, and seek a more prosperous life in Paris. She took along the four children—Yolande, the eldest; Simone and the two boys, Virgile and Henri. Yolande was 20 at the time. She was only 30 when she died.

The Nourissat family established itself successfully in Paris and fitted naturally into the pattern of small bourgeois life. Simone married a taxi driver. The two boys became house painters, and one of them, Virgile, married the daughter of a fairly well-to-do cafe owner. Mme. Nourissat herself took in sewing; she was highly proud of the match.

But Yolande was the most successful. She married a small manufacturer of pottery and was better off than the rest of the family until the time of her husband's death in 1935. Shortly thereafter she had to get a job. She was employed by a chemical plant in the industrial suburb of St. Denis. There she advanced quickly to the position of forewoman. For the two years following her husband's death she continued in mourning. That is, she wore widow's weeds and a wistful expression—very becoming.

Apparently, however, this was not all of her life. It turned out, according to police investigators, that her solemn widow's habit was only an attitude revealed to her family and her family's friends. She had no patience with the subdued life expected of a young widow. To enliven her existence, she took a second job. She worked at night as hat check girl in the little night club called l'As du Coeur (Ace of Hearts). On occasion she was also called on to act as hostess to men who came there alone and wanted to dance. The place was a little off-color, a little racy. It was in a neighborhood with a reputation for—well, unconventionality to put it mildly.

Yolande was obviously an opportunist, the police surmised. She seemed to demand more excitement out of life than her routine job and conventional family life were able to supply. Yet in each of her three spheres of activity she was consistent. At her forewoman's job she was capable, efficient and conscientious. Her employers had perhaps a little more than ordinary respect for her. At home she was apparently content. Her mother made no complaint of her conduct. She joined in family gatherings and took an interest in her brothers' and sister's social lives. She seemed to belong.

This was obviously not the case—as the job at l'As du Coeur proved. Presently it was discovered that the young widow had not two jobs, but three. She was employed by a M. Rouffignac of the Ruff Detective Agency as well. Possibly her job at the night club had something to do with this other, for she was employed to shadow husbands whose wives suspected them of infidelity—and wives whose husbands entertained similar dark suspicions. The As du Coeur seems to have been a rendezvous popular with unfaithful husbands and wives. Divorce was M. Rouffignac's specialty. And apparently jealousy wantoned in the circles which supplied his clientele. For Mme. Toureaux had been earning between 1500 and 1800 francs ($65 to $81) a month during the year and more she had been employed as confidential agent—a very tidy income, considering the present exchange value of the franc.

The police reports don't make it entirely clear whether Mme. Toureaux actually suffered from the psychological disease of split personality, or whether she merely seemed to. There is certainly more than a hint that she did. She adapted herself so perfectly to each of her three secret lives, was so consistent in each role and kept them all so rigidly apart. On the day of her murder she was playing the dutiful daughter and family friend.

The previous day—Saturday—she had gone shopping for a spring outfit and had come home with a picture hat and a gay flowered frock. It was her emergence from mourning—the first time she had worn color when she was with her family.

On the following day she rose at 9:30, tidied her little efficiency apartment in the Rue Bayle, not far from the Pere La Chaise cemetery. She breakfasted alone as was her custom and dressed with unusual care in the outfit she had bought herself the previous day. Before noon she arrived at her mother's flat, where the family and their relatives, husbands and wives, were having Sunday dinner together. It was a heavy dinner and they were all very gay. At about 2:30 the older members of the group were beginning to feel their wine and were ready to take naps; the younger ones were eager to go out and have parties of their own. Mme. Toureaux and her brother, Henri Nourissat, and the latter's friend, Henri Kagan, decided to go to a restaurant and dance away the late afternoon.

THEY went to l'Hermitage, a pleasant cafe in the Rue des Deux Moulins, not far from the Bois de Vincennes and the Seine. The cafe was crowded and gay that holiday afternoon and Yolande was a merry widow for fair. She danced with all comers—as is likely to be the custom in such restaurants in Paris, where an introduction is not compulsory.

That evening there was to be a second family gathering. M. Arnold, the father-in-law of Yolande's brother, Virgile, was presiding at a meeting of his "provincial society," of which he was a charter member and honorary president. He had asked the Nourissat family to be his guests. At about 6 o'clock Yolande decided to go home and dress for the evening. The day was growing cool and her light dress was no longer sufficient.

Her brother and his friend, Kagan, were not yet ready to call it a day. They were having a good time at the cafe and suggested that she leave without them. She did. She walked to the bus terminal, took the bus to the Metro terminal. The conductor saw her get aboard and noticed the red ribbon she was wearing, at first taking it for a Legion d'Honneur decoration. It was actually the color of a patriotic organization of which she was a member.

The bus reached the terminal at precisely 6:24—in time to catch the next train into the city. She bought her ticket and seated herself in the seat beside the door.

Now this seat, a single chair, faces directly forward and the door opens behind it and to the left of the person who occupies it. It has a high back—high enough so that it almost

PRINCE WILLIAM of SWEDEN DIRECTS a MOTION PICTURE

Royal Artist Extends His Career by Filming a Study of Lapland.

PRINCE WILLIAM, second son of King Gustaf of Sweden, is an enthusiastic artist—as are several other members of the Bernadotte family. His latest vocation—and he attacks all of them with an amount of zest that removes him somewhat from the dilettante class—is movie production. The accompanying photographs show him on location in Lapland, where he has been busy filming a social study of the life of Swedish pioneer farmers and nomadic tribes. He not only wrote the scenario, but also directed the filming.

His Royal Highness is an old hand at motion picture photography, a pastime he shares with his brother, the Crown Prince, and his younger brother, Sigvard. The latter is now in Hollywood studying the industry while acting as technical expert in the production of a Class A feature. After a year there he intends to return to Sweden to act as commercial advisor to the distributing agent of the company he is now serving.

William has always been keenly interested in drama, but has hitherto demonstrated little interest in cinema manufacture. He began life as a naval cadet, but early deserted the stuffy-respectable profession of honorary officer in the Swedish Navy to become a poet. Several of his verses were published in collected form and became popular for group readings in Stockholm. Thus encouraged he wrote two plays which were produced at the Royal Swedish Theater in the capital.

Being equipped with a perfect knowledge of English he translated one of them himself and sent the translation to a London producer, who was aghast to discover passages of dialogue two and three pages long assigned to single performers. Apparently plans for a London production were permanently shelved.

Prince William is one of the most romantic public figures in Scandinavia. He has engaged in several difficult scientific expeditions, one to central Africa and the Belgian Congo, another to Central America. While he has never claimed to be a scientist, his collections of insects, hides and other specimens have been valuable accessions for Swedish museums.

These journeys have formed the material for other literary efforts—including travel books, articles (one written for the Post-Dispatch) and poetry. He has visited America, living here ostensibly as a private citizen and making a living as a lecturer and writer. In Stockholm he served for a time as dramatic critic of the weekly journal, Idun.

THE Bernadottes have preserved their popularity in a highly democratic country by their energetic pursuit of serious professions. The 79-year-old King is not only an enthusiastic tennis player, but has been politically active despite the opposition of cabinets and legislatures. The Crown Prince is interested not only in movie photography, but also in political science and architecture; he is an enthusiastic horseman as well, and has been one of the most ardent sponsors of archeological investigations. Prince William's son, Prince Lennart (who married a commoner, also a royal habit in Sweden) has followed his father into literature. Prince Eugene, the King's brother, is a painter whose work is taken seriously by fellow-countrymen who are generally critical in artistic matters. He painted several murals for the famous Stockholm City Hall, the national monument of which Swedes are especially proud. Prince Sigvard was prominent as a theatrical designer before he lost royal status by marrying a German actress and moving to Hollywood.

But with all this competition, William remains the most vibrantly active and picturesque member of the family and is said to be personally one of the most engaging. His movie will, of course, be shown publicly in Sweden—if it is successful. Possibly his younger brother will be the distributor.

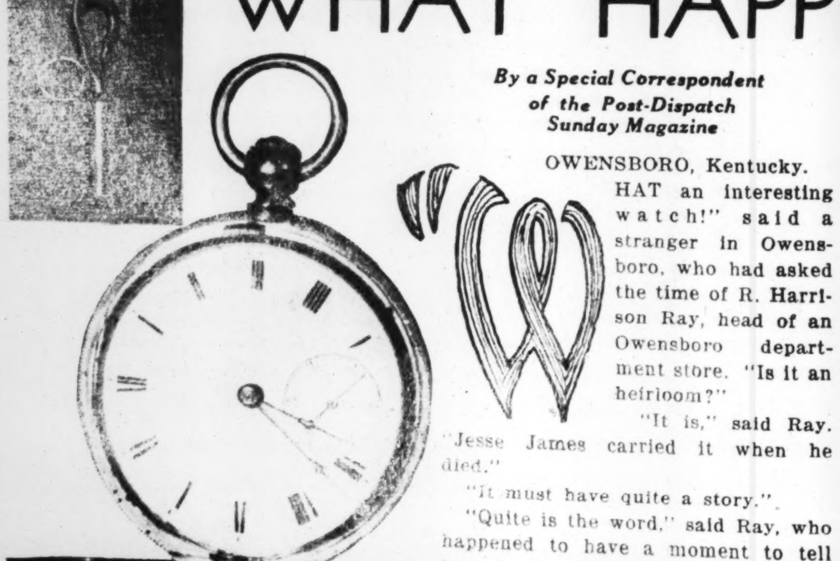
WHAT HAPPENED to JESSE JAMES' WATCH



Jesse James' watch, now owned by R. Harrison Ray of Owensboro, Kentucky.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

OWENSBORO, Kentucky.

"WHAT an interesting watch!" said a stranger in Owensboro, who had asked the time of R. Harrison Ray, head of an Owensboro department store. "Is it an heirloom?"

"It is," said Ray. "Jesse James carried it when he died."

"It must have quite a story."

"Quite is the word," said Ray, who happened to have a moment to tell it. And so came out the true-life tale, unknown to most of this generation except for experts on evidence, of the watch that saved an innocent man from prison.

First let it be made clear that Ray is no kin to the Missouri forerunner of Dillinger and "Pretty Boy" Floyd. The watch came down to him from his grandfather, the late Judge R. H. Rountree of Lebanon, Kentucky. Judge Rountree didn't know the notorious Missouri desperado, never saw him but once in his life, and that once is the story.

On September 3, 1880, Judge Rountree and his daughter, Miss Patsy Rountree, were passengers on a stage coach held up on the way from Mammoth Cave to Cave City, Kentucky. Two unmasked highwaymen, pistols drawn, made the passengers stand in line and throw their money and valuables in a pile, threatening to shoot any who failed to obey. Judge Rountree's watch went on the stack. Men were hard in those days, for it is recorded that after gathering up the loot, the bandits made the male passengers drink whisky from a bottle which they produced.

The passengers were detained some time. Since the bandits were not masked it was believed that they could easily be identified should they be apprehended. Governor Luke Blackburn offered a reward and shortly afterward William Hunt, an Ohio County (Ky.) coal miner, was arrested. He was taken to Cave City for arraignment in a magistrate's court.

A Georgia planter named Craig and a Negro preacher, passengers on the robbed coach, identified Hunt as one of the gunmen. They said they were positive because of a mole on Hunt's face. One of the bandits had a mole.

According to an account by the late Judge Harry Gorin, attorney for Hunt, Judge Rountree said he had heard Hunt identified by the other witnesses, but all he could say was that if Hunt was one of the men his "faith in his recollection was very much shaken."

Hunt was held for trial in Circuit Court and remanded to jail without bond. After two continuances—18 months' delay—he was brought to trial, found guilty and sentenced to serve three years in prison.

While Hunt was awaiting trial his attorney had gone to Ohio County in an effort to secure alibi evidence. He learned Hunt had been away from his home at the time of the holdup. This, Judge Gorin afterward said, caused him to lose faith in his client, for Hunt refused to tell where he had been.

The day after Hunt was convicted, newspapers arrived telling of Jesse James' assassination by Bob Ford at St. Joseph on April 3, 1882. A watch like the one taken from Judge Rountree and a gold seal given him by Proctor Knott, Kentucky statesman, and bearing Judge Rountree's name, were found on the slain bandit's body. Judge Rountree sent the serial number of his watch to St. Joseph and the identification was complete.

A picture of James was sent to Judge Rountree and when he saw it, he said it showed "one of the most striking resemblances I have ever seen between two men. Their every feature, their manner of combing their hair correspond to a nicety, and most singular of all, upon James' face is a mole in almost the same place as the one on Hunt's face."

"I have always said I couldn't recognize Hunt as one of the men who robbed us," Judge Rountree added. "I do recognize this man as one of them and the one Hunt was mistaken for."

With the assistance of Judge Rountree, Judge Gorin secured other information that pointed to James and subsequently to his partner, Ryan, as his companion in that crime, but due to the difficulty of presenting it in proper form it was decided to ask a gubernatorial pardon for Hunt instead of seeking a new trial. Governor Blackburn granted a pardon and Hunt was a free man—after almost two years in jail.

MOST of Hollywood's legendary Wonder Boys are becoming gray-thatched or double-chinned. One, Irving Thalberg, is dead. And only one distinguished youngster remains. He is tall, lanky, bespectacled, 27-year-old Norman Krasna, playwright, screenwright and producer.

A quick estimate of his Hollywood stature, stated in Hollywood terms is contained in these two facts: A few years ago Krasna was a clerk earning $18 a week in the bargain basement of a New York department store. Today he pays $1200 a week in income taxes.

The screen colony hasn't got around to identifying Krasna as a Wonder Boy because that term is applied to brilliant young [illegible] and Krasna is just now [illegible] [illegible] on his producing career. "[illegible]," said a former employer. "The most wonderful thing about Norman is that nobody has throttled him. Infant prodigy! Call him 'impudent prodigy' and you've got something!"

From that you may guess that the rise of Krasna has been something other than Algeresque. Oh, he worked—long and diligently. And there is none to impugn his scrupulous honesty—an outspoken, devastating honesty which has shocked, amused and infuriated lots of local chieftains on the Gold Coast.

An example: When Krasna was a $50 hireling in the publicity department at Warner Brothers, he attended an office preview of a new Darryl Zanuck production. On the way out, Zanuck asked if anyone had any suggestions for improving the feature. "The only way you can improve that film," piped Krasna, "is to take a pair of scissors and cut it—lengthwise."

Krasna early developed a philosophy that it is better to be wrong than to be silent. Made drama critic of a tabloid at a tender age, he fretted for a time in obscurity. Then, reviewing a revue, he mistook Miller and Lyles, a foremost colored team, as white actors blacked up. Strolling into Sardi's for lunch next day he found himself the object of much good-natured ribbing by a lot of people who previously never had noticed him at all.

Meditating on this phenomenon, Krasna decided it was easy to get attention, and that attention was one of the things he needed in his business. He mercilessly panned some prominent actors, among them Eddie Buzzell and Groucho Marx, and these two now are his closest friends.

He had started out to be a lawyer. "All Jewish mothers want their sons to be doctors or lawyers," he explains. His parents were poor. That meant day work and night school. At the department store he fluctuated between shoes, sports and linens, and evenings he was up to his elbows in Blackstone. Then he decided he wanted to be a newspaper man instead.

Alexander Woollcott, Franklin P. Adams and Heywood Broun, all on the old New York World, already were his gods. "Sometimes I actually prayed," recalled Krasna. "It seemed that I just HAD to be a reporter. I had a favorite dream about scooping the town by finding Mayor Jimmy Walker in an ash can."

But nothing happened until Krasna went to see the play, "The Front Page." Next morning he and other aspiring barristers assembled to take their real property examination. Krasna sat there staring at the questions while through his mind raced the exciting dialogue of the night before. After 10 minutes he arose and handed in a blank paper. "But you can't leave for two hours," protested the examiner.

"That's what you think!" snorted the young man as he stalked out of his law career forever.

Finally, and perhaps by dint of more prayer, he got a job as carrier pigeon, or copy boy, on The World. There he actually came in contact with Broun, Woollcott, F. P. A., and the Sunday editor, Louis Weitzenkorn. He ran their copy, bought their cigarettes and calmed them with tepid coffee.

After Broun went to the Scripps-Howard newspapers Krasna wrote and sent to him a literary effusion complaining about the lot of copy boys in general and his own pitiable plight in particular. Broun printed the letter and Krasna, instead of being fired by The World, was given some

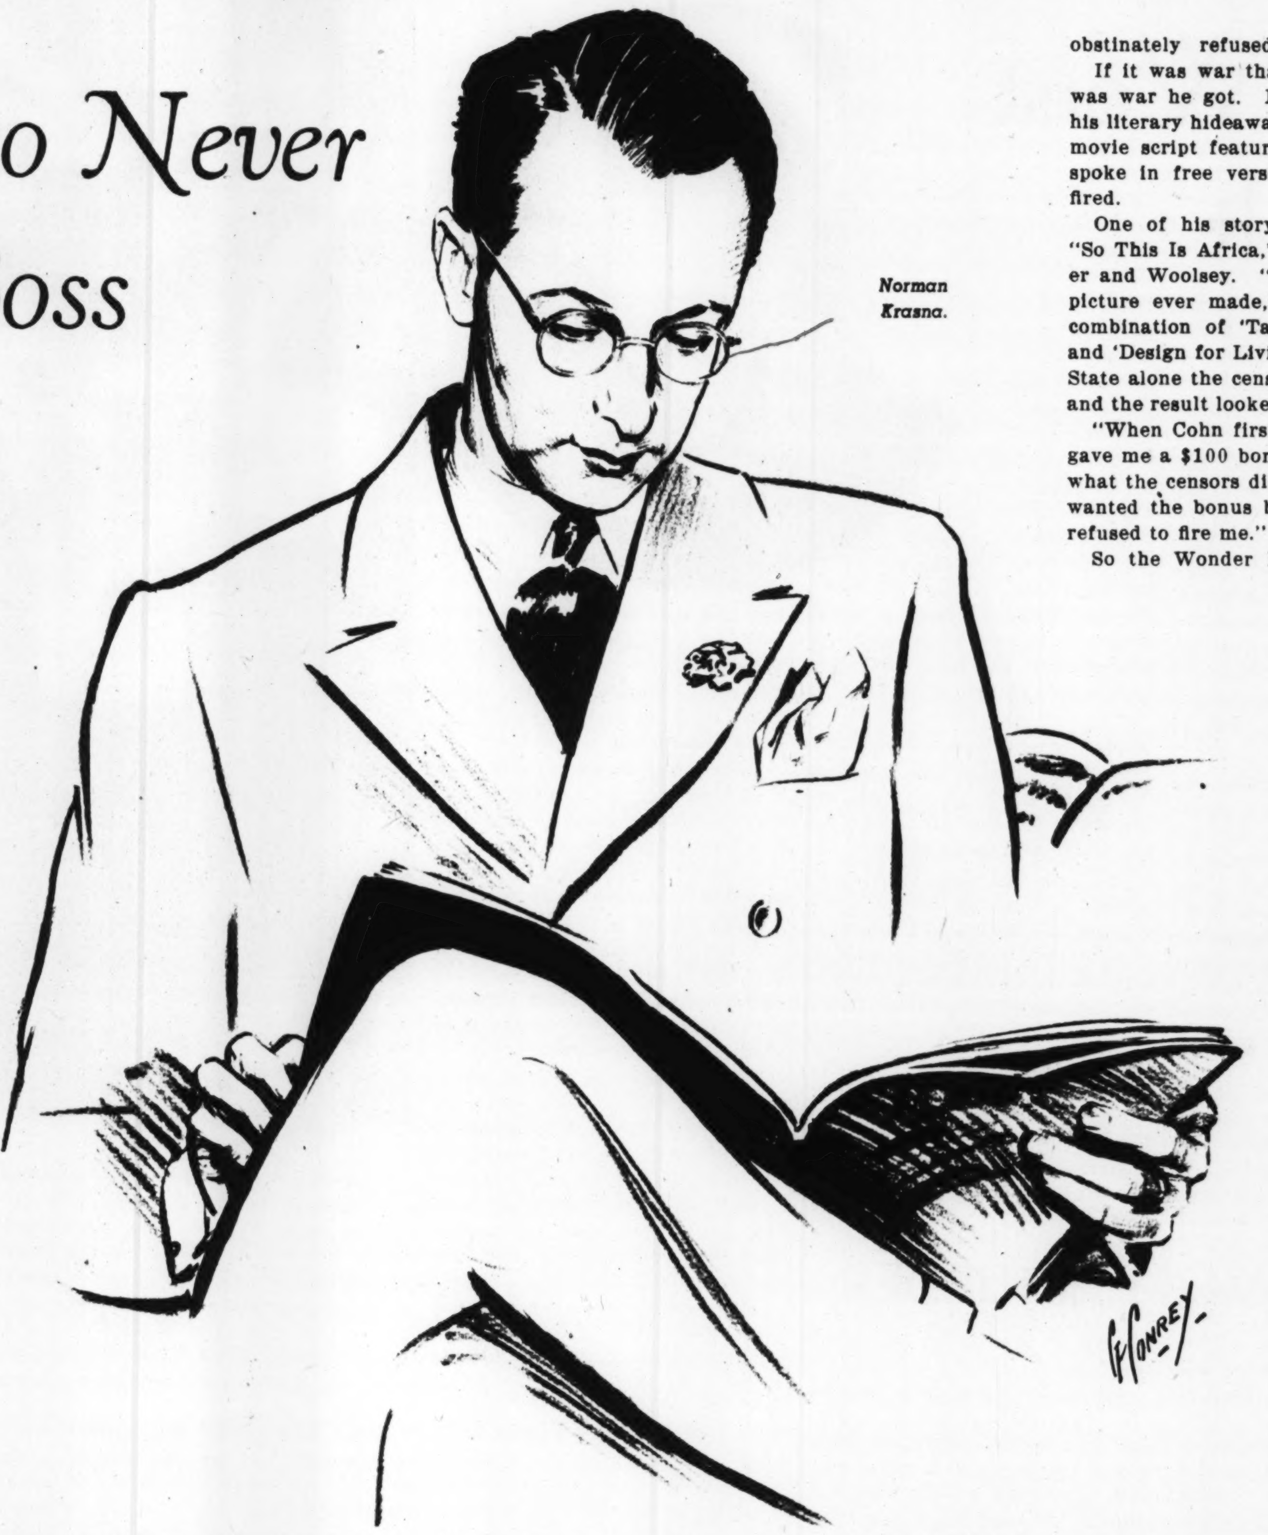
High Lights on Unusual Personalities

NORMAN KRASNA
JOANNA de TUSCAN

The Man Who Never "Yessed" His Boss



Norman Krasna.

HOLLYWOOD, California.

MOST of Hollywood's legendary Wonder Boys are becoming gray-thatched or double-chinned. One, Irving Thalberg, is dead. And only one distinguished youngster remains. He is tall, lanky, bespectacled, 27-year-old Norman Krasna, playwright, screenwright and producer.

A quick estimate of his Hollywood stature, stated in Hollywood terms is contained in these two facts: A few years ago Krasna was a clerk earning $18 a week in the bargain basement of a New York department store. Today he pays $1200 a week in income taxes.

The screen colony hasn't got around to identifying Krasna as a Wonder Boy because that term is applied to brilliant young executives, and Krasna is just now getting started on his producing career. "Up to now," said a former employer, "the most wonderful thing about Norman is that nobody has throttled him. Infant prodigy! Call him 'impudent prodigy' and you've got something!"

From that you may guess that the rise of Krasna has been something other than Algeresque. Oh, he worked—long and diligently. And there is none to impugn his scrupulous honesty—an outspoken, devastating honesty which has shocked, amused and infuriated lots of local chieftains on the Gold Coast.

An example: When Krasna was a $50 hireling in the publicity department at Warner Brothers, he attended an office preview of a new Darryl Zanuck production. On the way out, Zanuck asked if anyone had any suggestions for improving the feature. "The only way you can improve that film," piped Krasna, "is to take a pair of scissors and cut it—lengthwise."

Krasna early developed a philosophy that it is better to be wrong than to be silent. Made drama critic of a tabloid at a tender age, he fretted for a time in obscurity. Then, reviewing a revue, he mistook Miller and Lyles, a foremost colored team, as white actors blacked up. Strolling into Sardi's for lunch next day he found himself the object of much good-natured ribbing by a lot of people who previously never had noticed him at all.

Meditating on this phenomenon, Krasna decided it was easy to get attention, and that attention was one of the things he needed in his business. He mercilessly panned some prominent actors, among them Eddie Buzzell and Groucho Marx, and these two now are his closest friends.

He had started out to be a lawyer. "All Jewish mothers want their sons to be doctors or lawyers," he explains. His parents were poor. That meant day work and night school. At the department store he fluctuated between shoes, sports and linens, and evenings he was up to his elbows in Blackstone. Then he decided he wanted to be a newspaper man instead.

Alexander Woollcott, Franklin P. Adams and Heywood Broun, all on the old New York World, already were his gods. "Sometimes I actually prayed," recalled Krasna. "It seemed that I just HAD to be a reporter. I had a favorite dream about scooping the town by finding Mayor Jimmy Walker in an ash can."

But nothing happened until Krasna went to see the play, "The Front Page." Next morning he and other aspiring barristers assembled to take their real property examination. Krasna sat there staring at the questions while through his mind raced the exciting dialogue of the night before. After 10 minutes he arose and handed in a blank paper. "But you can't leave for two hours," protested the examiner.

"That's what you think!" snorted the young man as he stalked out of his law career forever.

Finally, and perhaps by dint of more prayer, he got a job as carrier pigeon, or copy boy, on The World. There he actually came in contact with Broun, Woollcott, F. P. A., and the Sunday editor, Louis Weitzenkorn. He ran their copy, bought their cigarettes and calmed them with tepid coffee.

After Broun went to the Scripps-Howard newspapers Krasna wrote and sent to him a literary effusion complaining about the lot of copy boys in general and his own pitiable plight in particular. Broun printed the letter and Krasna, instead of being fired by The World, was given some writing to do.

When Weitzenkorn bolted The World, for the Graphic, a raucous tabloid, to gather material for his "Five Star Final," Krasna went along. Soon he became drama editor, but gave that up to come to Hollywood as a press agent.

One of his publicity coups while in the employ of Warner Brothers was the presentation of a cup to Loretta Young by "The Cultural Arts Guild of America" for her accomplishments and contributions to cultural and intellectual advancement. All this was a dazzling figment of the Krasna imagination. He invented the "Guild" and hired a professorial-looking actor with a goatee to preside at the ceremony and present a cup which had been rented from a local jeweler.

Between similar chores, Krasna penned the play, "Louder Please."

"It was partly about my boss and partly a rewrite of 'The Front Page,' which I had seen several times and can still recite almost line for line," he says. "I guess I've stolen more from 'The Front Page' than anybody has lifted from anything else."

He sold it on Broadway, where it was a mild success with Lee Tracy in the lead. When that happened Darryl Zanuck was furious that Warners didn't have the screen rights. Krasna pointed out that "Louder Please" originally had been submitted to the studio and had been turned down as being too satirical.

When Columbia Pictures wired an offer of $40,000 for the rights, Krasna retaliated with an offer of $15,000 for the studio. But he soon joined Columbia's writing staff and thereby began one of the strangest relationships in Hollywood's history.

President Harry Cohn hailed Krasna as a Wonder Boy and made him his general assistant. Krasna was successively impressed, amused and resentful. He decided to leave the employ of Mr. Cohn, but the latter obstinately refused to release him.

If it was war that Cohn wanted, it was war he got. Krasna repaired to his literary hideaway and turned out a movie script featuring a horse which spoke in free verse. But he wasn't fired.

One of his story assignments was "So This Is Africa," featuring Wheeler and Woolsey. "It was the dirtiest picture ever made," said Krasna, "a combination of 'Tarzan of the Apes' and 'Design for Living.' In New York State alone the censors made 194 cuts and the result looked like a two-reeler.

"When Cohn first saw the script he gave me a $100 bonus. When he saw what the censors did to the picture he wanted the bonus back. But he still refused to fire me."

So the Wonder Boy began baiting his boss, who out-Goldwyns Sam Goldwyn in misapplying words and speaking with an accent. Once Cohn settled himself among his stooges in the studio restaurant, smiled expansively and said: "Boys, I bet you can't guess where was I last night!"

"Night school!" ventured Krasna.

Another time Cohn was telling how much he enjoyed flying to New York, and how he had vowed never to take a train. Krasna said, "I suppose you'd starve to death on a train, because people have to write out their order in the diners."

One day Cohn's guests at lunch were Elsie Janis and Lewis Milestone, and Cohn was telling them of a trip to England he was planning. "You'd better take me with you, boss," suggested Krasna.

"And what could you do for me in England?" demanded Cohn.

"I'd be your interpreter," said Krasna with malicious earnestness. At that, Cohn finally fired him.

Krasna worked furiously for six weeks, turned out a play and a movie. The first was the highly successful "Small Miracle"; the second "The Richest Girl in the World," nominated for the Academy Award of 1934.

After that it was easy. "The Richest Girl" netted him $15,500. Paramount bought "Small Miracle" and hired him to adapt it into "Four Hours to Kill." He did about 10 more film stories, among them "Romance in Manhattan," "Hands Across the Table" and "Wife vs. Secretary."

"I'm not a very good writer, but I'm glib," he observed.

He not only never has written anything that he didn't sell, but he has sold several stories that he didn't write. He told the story of "Fury" and was paid for it before a word was put on paper. He got a $10,000 check for five minutes spent in expounding the plot of "As Good as Married," and a like sum for "You and Me." These latter two are on his present production schedule. He and Groucho Marx wrote "The King and the Chorus Girl" and collected $30,000.

NOW he is a producer for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Since he had money and leisure, there was only one compensation for surrendering himself to the office-bound routine of an executive. That is the privilege of making pictures just the way he wants 'em. As a mere writer, Krasna had suffered tortures.

Sitting in his office in the former Irving Thalberg bungalow, I asked with what feeling he approached his job of spending millions. Was he scared?

He said, "Well, I do have a private little nightmare, a dream that the accountants and bookkeepers have been wrong all the time and that the studios really are losing money.

"Actually, though, it's easy to get hardened to tossing big sums around. It's like gambling with chips instead of cash; you don't think of it in terms of dollars. Also it's easy for a producer to slip into the idea that he's God. He can say, 'Let there be a city here, with the Queen of Sheba on a throne, and 20,000 extras. And pretty soon there's his city, complete with Queen."

His own menage consists of two servants, a spaniel named Boss and a small duck named Donald. The colonial house is almost a museum of early American furniture, silver and glass. He has some fine paintings, too, and recently bought a Joshua Reynolds.

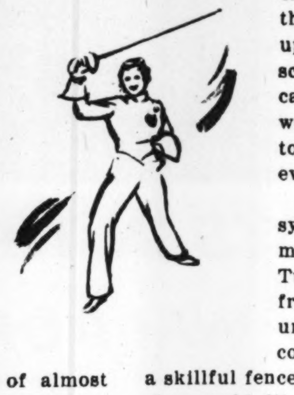
"Shows how filthy rich I'm getting," he said. "Do you wonder I like it here?"

PAUL HARRISON.

Girl Fencing Champion—Modern Style

DETROIT, Michigan.

ANYONE whose memory of the American scene goes back to the McKinley administration may experience a faint nostalgia in contemplating that modern, alert and accomplished young woman, Joanna de Tuscan. The oldster may not immediately be able to explain the feeling, for Joanna is as 1937 as the coronation of George VI. But a little reflection clears up the mystery. In those placid, gas-lit times around the turn of the century, when artistically-minded housewifes beautified their domains with bead portieres, roaring sea shells, satin-draped "dens" and raffia doodads, one of the decorative glories of the period was the picture-top cushion, which enlivened the domestic scene with embroidered, stamped or painted representations of almost anything from kittens at play to the snow-capped heights of Mount Fujiyama. And one of the most popular and pleasing subjects of these pillow pictures was the lady fencer. Attired becomingly in short skirt and snug-fitting waist, lounging gracefully on a divan, she was lovely of face and figure. There was no air of the female athlete about her—no suggestion of hard biceps and arnica rub-downs and training drudgery. The lady fencer of the cushion tops was a figure of romance, inspiring in impressionable youths a rather confused medley of day dreaming about gallantry and adventure, the Bohemian life and d'Artagnanesque exploits.



Joanna de Tuscan is a good deal like that. She has a vivid brunette beauty, a symmetry of form, a freshness and smoothness of appearance that make it easy to think of her in terms of feminine charm—and a bit difficult to remember the steely wrist, long hours of work and dogged purpose that have made her a fencing champion. Recognition of her ornamental qualities came from Hollywood not long ago in an offer of a moving picture contract. She declined that offer, but it isn't unlikely that there will be another which she will accept; she plans to go to Hollywood next fall to look things over.

Despite the fact she doesn't look it, Joanna has been active in athletics since girlhood (she's 25 now), although handicapped at the start by frailty resulting from several severe childhood illnesses and by the necessity of making up the time lost from school while sick. She became an expert horsewoman and swimmer and took part in girls' track events.

Nine years ago, at a symphony concert, she met handsome Bela de Tuscan, who had come from Rumania to join an uncle in business in this country. De Tuscan was a skillful fencer, and the girl, deciding she would like to add expertness in swordsmanship to her other accomplishments, arranged to take lessons from him. Three months after becoming his pupil, she won a Michigan State championship with the foils. Four years later she and her instructor were married. She kept up her fencing, improving steadily.

In 1934 Mrs. de Tuscan finished second in the national championships for women. In 1935 she won the Midwest tournament held at Washington University in St. Louis under auspices of the Amateur Fencers' League of America, and finished third in the nationals. Last year she emerged winner three consecutive times in national tournaments — reputedly the only American woman ever to have made this record of consistency. Also she won a place on the Olympic team.

In the Olympic tryouts, she fought 27 bouts between 8 p. m. and 2:45 a. m.—and lost first place by one point. Her failure to win in the international competition of the Olympics has been attributed to a change in coaching methods and over-training — she fenced eight hours a day aboard ship on the way to Europe and went stale.

Although sport has occupied much of Mrs. de Tuscan's attention, she has found time also for art and dancing She studied at the Arts and Crafts School in Providence and has been particularly interested in the designing and making of jewelry. She has danced with the Bonstelle Theater and Olga Fricker groups. Lately, however, fencing has practically crowded out these other pursuits.

JOANNA DE TUSCAN is five feet four and a half inches tall and weighs 125 pounds. Her training includes a diet that leaves out fried meat, creamed vegetables, heavy desserts, white bread and potatoes—except when baked. When drinks are served she takes unsweetened lemonade.

She considers fencing almost a perfect form of exercise. "It doesn't tax your heart as so many other sports do," she says. "That's because you get a regular rest period as in boxing."

She is still one of Bela de Tuscan's pupils, one of the many whom he instructs in sword play in a big studio in an old mansion on East Jefferson avenue. Around the walls of the studio are trophies the prize pupil has won, and all manner of swords, from shiny new foils to a Crusader's long and cumbersome broadsword. Here the De Tuscans, husband and wife, frequently engage in saber bouts that are something to watch. They virtually always end the same way, with Joanna breathless and helpless and smiling ruefully, for she cannot match the wizardry and power of her husband's swordmanship, but for a time the battle is furious. Feet stamp, bodies bend and twist, and the glittering blades, clashing in a continuous din, make swift, brilliant patterns of light that might be symbolically viewed as a design for living.

When the Female Bouncer Got the Worst of It

The Latest Adventure of Broadway's Strong-Arm Girl.

THAT Junoesque young woman peering into theatrical and night club agencies in pursuit of work these days is Lois de Fee, the best female bouncer in the business. Things haven't been going so well with Lois since she quit her strong-arm job at the Dizzy Club—but anyone can see that by tossing a quick look into the stormy De Fee countenance. Those two blackened eyes and that twisted nose could only have come from a sudden encounter with some hard object—five knuckles for instance.

Well, if the truth must out, that's exactly what happened to Lois in spite of her six feet three inches and 185 pounds of hard, well-rounded womanhood. She insists that Lou Brice, brother of Fanny Brice, the comedian, slugged her when she wasn't looking but that is a matter for the courts or the lawyers to settle. Lois said she was ready to sue for $50,000 when Lou's attorneys leaped into the matter and began discussing terms. How much is being mentioned is still a secret.

If Lou did the pitching that Lois caught so ineptly he is a better man than one might think at first glance for Miss de Fee is no sucker for anybody's right or left. She can take and throw a punch and in the infighting her knowledge of jiu jitsu makes her even more dangerous. Ask any of the drinkers who got boisterous at the Dizzy Club during Lois' tenure of office as bouncer de luxe. The way she tossed the men around was a caution.

Lois de Fee, in adversity.

But before going into the question of Brice vs. De Fee let's look at Lois' show business career. About two years ago an agent heard a well modulated cough and looked up and up and up until he saw—high above his desk—a striking looking face surmounted by a mass of jet black hair.

"I'm Lois de Fee from Texas," drawled the young lady. "I'm an eccentric dancer."

The agent gulped. Who, he wanted to know, ever saw an eccentric dancer towering six feet three and nudging the scales in the direction of the 200 mark. Even presuming to dance with these dimensions, he insinuated, was the essence of eccentricity and he hinted that some sort of manual labor was probably the sort of work she best was fitted for.

The young lady, quite unconcerned, told the agent to take another look. This time he noticed that in spite of her size she was symmetrically formed, that hips, feet, etc., were in proportion. The upshot of the matter was that he placed her with a unit called "La Vie Parisienne" which got down as far as Cuba. She still likes to exhibit a photograph of herself wondrously undraped which she says the Havana newspapers played up.

SHE was a success with the unit but on her return to New York—she was 17 then—she found it difficult to get a job. Too big, chorused the agents.

Meantime the Dizzy Club, in its efforts to live up to its name, was on the lookout for a new kind of bouncer. It heard about Lois and the reputation as a fighter she had earned in her native Austin, Tex.; for instance, the time she was sitting on a balcony eating dinner with a jockey named Louis Machado, and she got bored and tossed him into the river.

Stories such as this intrigued the operators of the club and they put Lois on. She had no trouble with the men but every now and then one of the female of the species would attempt to make it her night to howl and Lois had her size 8 hands full.

"I've had a tough scrap or two with women," she recalled. "One night a woman came in and said she was Evelyn Nesbit and she said something personal, and we mixed it. If she ever comes back I'll pop her on the nose again."

From the Dizzy Club Lois went to Leon and Eddie's popular nitery. She had a long engagement there and became the rage of the wrestling crowd.

"I like to go around with wrestlers," she said. "They teach me jiu jitsu holds. I was going to become a wrestler but I guess I'm too lazy. Also I am so young and I have been married twice and that took some time. I have a habit of slipping away and getting married."

This brought her around to the subject of men.

"I like army flyers and jockeys so far," she said. "Isn't it funny how big women like me are always getting tangled up with little bitty men? My jockey husband was only five feet tall, practically a midget alongside of me and I've almost married a couple of jockeys since. Maybe, they'll let me be now that I've been turning my muscles to account.

Lois de Fee muscling up for an admiring waiter.

"I was supposed to get married not so long ago to a Captain in the Air Service but I changed my mind. I don't want any more wedding rings."

About Lou Brice? Her stormy eyes clouded, her nostrils flanged and her big hands clenched and unclenched.

Lois said she was sitting in the Yacht Club just minding her own business when Lou began to heckle her from an adjoining table. After all he is the brother-in-law of Billy Rose, and a girl must eat, Lois hinted, so she ignored his remarks. Then he began to pluck at her arm and when she shook him off, slapped her.

Boiling inwardly she avoided making an issue of the slap and things quieted down for awhile. Suddenly, she said, she felt a terrific shock on the back of the neck and everything went black. Lou is only five feet eight and weighs 140 pounds but Lois could give no satisfactory alibi, even when reminded that she had once challenged Primo Carnera.

MISS DE FEE was born in Caruthersville, Missouri, on August 1, 1918, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William de Fee. When she was two years old the family moved to Texas and De Fee pere became the Sheriff of Texarkana.

Always big for her age the girl displayed an early talent for dancing and appeared in amateur and semi-professional theatricals. It was during this period of her life that she met her first husband, Mike Rennie, an army flyer, five feet five inches tall. They were married on February 19, 1933, and parted a few days later. An annulment was obtained on behalf of Miss de Fee.

"I didn't know what it was all about," she explained coyly.

A year later she met J. M. Gleason, a jockey, also five feet five inches tall and her affinity for small men led her to marry him on December, 1934. Two and a half months later she divorced him on grounds of incompatibility.

She has no serious beau at the moment but anything, she hints, is possible as long as there are so many "terribly attractive little men about." Miss de Fee has an aunt in St. Louis.

conceals the occupant. The panel between the door and the back of the chair is made of a stout material, white enameled. And some eight inches above the back are a pair of horizontal iron bars to protect the passenger's head from the elbows of those who are steadying themselves to get off or on the car.

During the 60 seconds between the time the train left the terminal and the time it made its first stop, someone evidently stood behind Mme. Toureaux and stabbed her at the base of the neck. The knife, with finger prints intact, was left in the wound.

The four witnesses who had discovered her on the floor of the car were beyond suspicion. The officer, a young dentist who has the military rank of lieutenant and was escorting the three young women home, had witnesses to prove that he and his companions had been with friends up to the time they caught the subway. There was nothing to connect any of them with the victim and the lieutenant's name was kept confidential by the police. They all swore that the car had been empty save for the victim when they entered it. The adjoining second-class carriages were crowded, however. There were about 150 passengers on the train. No one had seen anyone go from one of the second-class carriages into the first-class one, or vice versa.

FROM this it seemed likely that the murderer had followed her into the car—though the ticket sellers and guards at Porte de Charenton terminal had no recollection that anyone else had bought a first-class ticket at about the time she did. He stabbed her with amazing swiftness and left her sitting upright in the chair. Then he ran to the front of the car, jumped down to the tracks, and escaped through the door used by subway work crews, into the street. Conceivably he remained in the car till it reached the Porte Doree, though it is a little difficult to conceive how he made his escape there.

The knife itself told nothing. The fingerprints found on it were not on record. And its make was so common that it might have been purchased at any hardware store in the capital. It had a 12-inch blade.

The investigation of Mme. Toureaux's life led to no conclusions. Her detective agency knew of no one who had manifested any enmity towards her on account of her work for jealous husbands and wives. While her night club work had brought her in contact with many unsavory characters, no one was known to have a grudge against her, so far as the police have been able to discover.

All in all, the case remains a complete mystery. And the press has, as usual, seized on the opportunity it offers for making the police look foolish. They have been quite unable to offer a tenable theory for the motive or identity of the murderer. At present the likelihood is that they never will.

The Waldorf
A Scott Tissue

MAKE THIS "LIGHT TEST"

FOR COMFORT AND SECURITY

NO THIN SPOTS IN THE NEW "Soft-Weve" WALDORF

HOLD a strip of the new Soft-Weve Waldorf to the light. Notice its uniform, even texture. You'll agree that it looks like a piece of smooth, soft cloth.

There are no thin spots to make it insecure. No rough "humps" to scratch and irritate tender skins.

Then make the same test with a piece of ordinary tissue. You'll be amazed to find it full of thin spots. It may even contain harmful dirt specks and splinters.

Surely your family deserves the protection of Soft-Weve Waldorf. Women and children, especially, should use this softer, safer tissue. Those who need special care will appreciate its greater comfort.

AND THERE'S DOUBLE VALUE, too, in the new Soft-Weve Waldorf. Because it gives you greater security, you need fewer sheets. You'll find that a roll of Soft-Weve Waldorf lasts several days longer than a roll of ordinary tissue that is full of thin spots.

Order a supply of Soft-Weve Waldorf from your grocer tomorrow. Begin at once to enjoy the extra comfort and security that it brings. And know that you are saving money at the same time. Scott Paper Co., Chester, Pa.

The Girl in Drawing Room 'A'

The Eighth in a Series of True Life Detective Stories

By G. R. ALEXANDER.

IF DETECTIVE IKE WALSTON, of Kansas City, Missouri, police had only known it, he had the why of the girl's murder within his grasp the moment he saw her. The vital clew was her beauty. But Walston, out there, in an isolated field under the hot sun, had no eye for beauty just then. What he was wondering was how in blazes he was going to solve this killing when there was not even a laundry mark on the pink silk chemise which was the only garment she wore or any other clew to the victim's identity—nor the slightest indication as to how the deuce her body came to be in this God-forsaken spot, anyhow.

The body had been found by John Martin, but that didn't mean anything. Buzzards had attracted him to the shoulder-high weeds along the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad right-of-way as he plied his job of track walking. The exact spot was 30 feet from the bright shiny rails and three-quarters of a mile from the nearest highway. It was three miles from Shelbina, Missouri, and a good two hours' ride from Quincy, Illinois. In other words, a million miles from nowhere and a most unlikely spot for a woman to be cavorting around in her underwear. . . .

Thumb prints on her throat.

But the orderly processes of investigation must begin somewhere. And Walston knew he would have to do a lot of explaining to reconcile the ugly, blue-black thumb prints on the girl's lovely throat with suicide. So wearily and against his will he turned to a closer inspection of that nearly nude body.

The girl, he judged, was about 24 or 25 years old. She was about five feet six in height and of slim build; Walston placed her weight at 110 to 115 pounds.

The immediate cause of death had been reported to him as strangulation. But the posture of the body—it was on its hands and knees, headed toward the distant highway — caused Walston to question that.

"How long has she been dead?" he asked the coroner.

"From four to six days," the examiner replied. "But I'll have to get her into Shelbina before I can be more exact."

"Got any ideas as to what killed her?"

"Strangulation was a factor, but there are broken bones and probably internal injuries. I'd say a heavy fall finished off the job."

"My idea exactly," said Walston. "In fact, I think she was choked aboard and thrown to her death from a passing train."

"How so?"

"Well, look at the location. It's three-quarters of a mile to the road, and there are no car marks, no trail of trampled-down stubble that would indicate an auto had been driven up here."

"MIGHTN'T the killer have parked his car and walked the girl up here? It is a nice isolated spot, you know."

"Look at the condition of the body. You, yourself, said a heavy fall contributed to death. There is nothing around here she could fall off except a train."

"Couldn't she have fallen or been pushed from a speeding automobile, then picked up by the killer and carried in here?"

"Sure, she could. But she wasn't. Where are her clothes?"

"Maybe the killer stripped them off to prevent identification."

"Oh, come now. You don't think a killer as brutal as this one must have been would be modest enough to leave a girl her chemise. Besides, look at the posture. Look at the way she's headed toward the highway. Isn't it more reasonable to suppose that she was choked aboard a train and heaved out a door or window, and that she died from injuries while trying to crawl to the road for help."

"Why? Why is it any more reasonable to suppose she'd be running around a train in her teddies than that she was stripped to them on the scene?"

"A night train. A Pullman! She was either getting ready for bed or had gone to it in her underwear. Girls do that, you know."

"I suppose they do. But what of it! You're not trying to tell me the killer choked her to death in a crowded Pullman, then calmly picked her up and heaved her out, while the porter and a couple of dozen passengers looked on."

"There are such things as compartments and drawing rooms," said Walston. "I figure she was killed in the privacy of one and heaved out the window while the roar of the wheels drowned out her cries."

"Well, now we're getting somewhere," replied the doctor. "What train do you think it was?"

"For Pete's sake, I'm no magician. I can take the evidence before my eyes and make a reasonable deduction, but I can't pull a solution out of my hat."

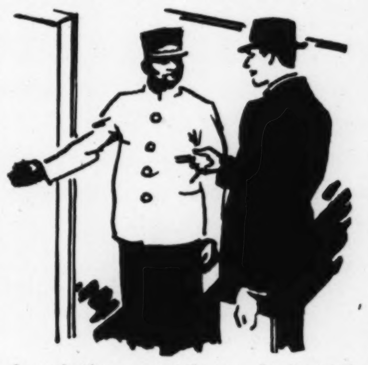
"What are you going to do?"

"I'm going to march you into Shelbina, and there I'm going to put you to work finding out the exact day this girl was killed. While you're doing that, I will be searching east and west along the line for her clothes and her baggage. And if I get any breaks on those two things, I will know whether it was an eastbound or westbound sleeper she was on and the day she was on it. I'll know where I'm headed then."

It was noon on June 17, 1918, that the body of the nearly nude woman was discovered. Twenty-four hours later, Walston was on his way to Kansas City. The doctor's examination had shown him the girl had died some time during the night of the thirteenth, that she was about to become a mother and that she wore no wedding ring.

A woman's shirtwaist, purse and a pair of patent leather shoes, size three, were found scattered along the tracks east of the body, indicating that the girl, if they were hers, had been traveling eastward toward Quincy, Illinois. So Walston was on his way to Kansas City, to talk to porters, check over compartment and drawing room reservation and see what he could find out.

From a porter aboard the C. B. & Q. Night Limited, Walston got a lead. This porter remembered that on the night of June 13 a woman answering the dead girl's description and a dark-eyed, round-faced man, with short cropped black hair, had taken drawing room "A" in car No. 111 for the trip from Kansas City to Quincy.



Only the man had gotten off, with his bag, at Palmyra Junction the next morning, and neither the woman nor baggage was in evidence when the train pulled into Quincy.

"Is this the bag?" said Walston, exhibiting a black Gladstone that had been abandoned in a coach at St. Joseph.

"Yes, sir, or one just like it," replied the porter.

Walston left him, and went into the passenger agent's office. Checking over the files he found that on the night of June 13, drawing room "A" car No. 111 on the night limited had been reserved for a Mr. and Mrs. John R. Jackson, of East Twelfth street, Kansas City. Wiring the ticket agent at Palmyra Junction, he learned that the dark-complexioned, round-faced man who had gotten off the night limited had immediately purchased a ticket for St. Joseph—where he had left the bag and boarded another train for Kansas City.

The trail was getting hot. Walston reported by telephone to Captain Larry Ghent, his chief, and received instructions to get Detectives John Martin and Jack Farrell and raid the East Twelfth street place immediately. An elderly woman answered their ring. She said she was the Jackson's housekeeper.

"Where are your employers?" asked Walston.

"Mr. Jackson's at work, Mrs. Jackson's in Chicago," the woman replied.

"When did she leave?"

"The night of June 13. Her husband went part way with her and came back the next day. They have a 2-year-old boy. He did not want to leave him alone long."

Walston explained his mission. He asked the housekeeper why the dead girl, if she were Mrs. Jackson and had a child, wore no wedding ring.

"That's why she went away," replied the woman. "She was in love with an actor and wanted to go on the stage with him."

Walston signaled his companions and sat down to wait. When 6 o'clock brought Jackson, they pounced upon the unsuspecting husband and questioned him.

Jackson got out his typewriter.

While Walston and his men kept after him, he sat down and wrote the following confession:

"About six months ago, after four years of marriage, I found out my wife was untrue to me. When I confronted her with her sin, we quarreled. For the sake of our boy, we attempted a reconciliation.

"On the afternoon of June 13, however, she told me she was going to take the baby and leave with the other man. She said she was going to Chicago to study music so she could go on the stage with him, and if I didn't give her the baby she would steal him.

"IN SPITE of her unfaithfulness, I loved my wife dearly. But I couldn't consent to her taking the child away like that. I told her we would leave the boy here in the housekeeper's care for the present, and that if she was bent on leaving that particular day, I would go with her part of the way to try to reach some amicable agreement.

"We took a drawing room on the night limited and continued the argument there.

"Somewhere on the way, Elizabeth confided to me that the reason she was leaving was because she was going to have a child by her lover.

"That drove me mad. I choked her. Losing my reason entirely, I pushed her out of the window. She screamed something, but over the roar of the train I could not hear what she said. I threw out her belongings and fell on the bed exhausted. Then I got off the train at Palmyra Junction and came back home."

Jackson was sentenced to 20 years in prison, but was pardoned by Governor Hyde in 1925.

RUSSIANS STORE the FRUITS of LABOR

—Associated Press photographs.

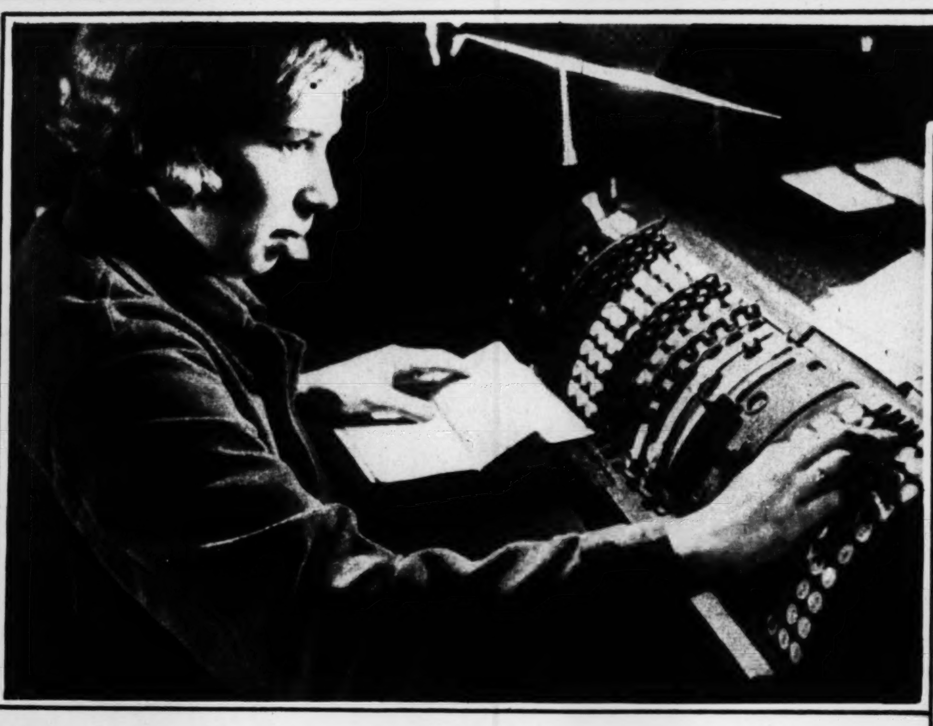
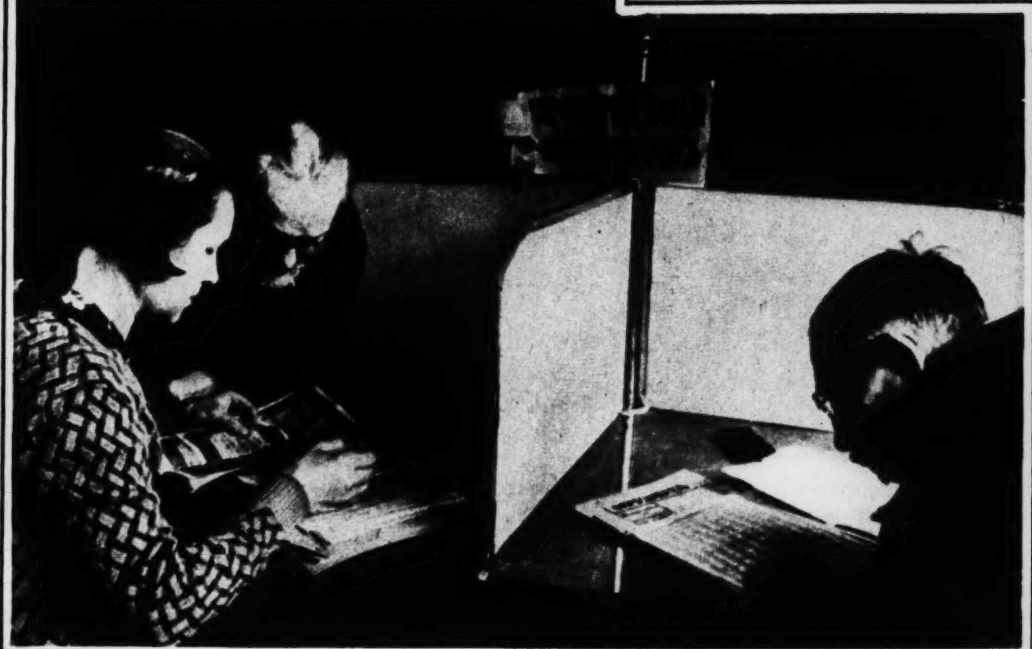
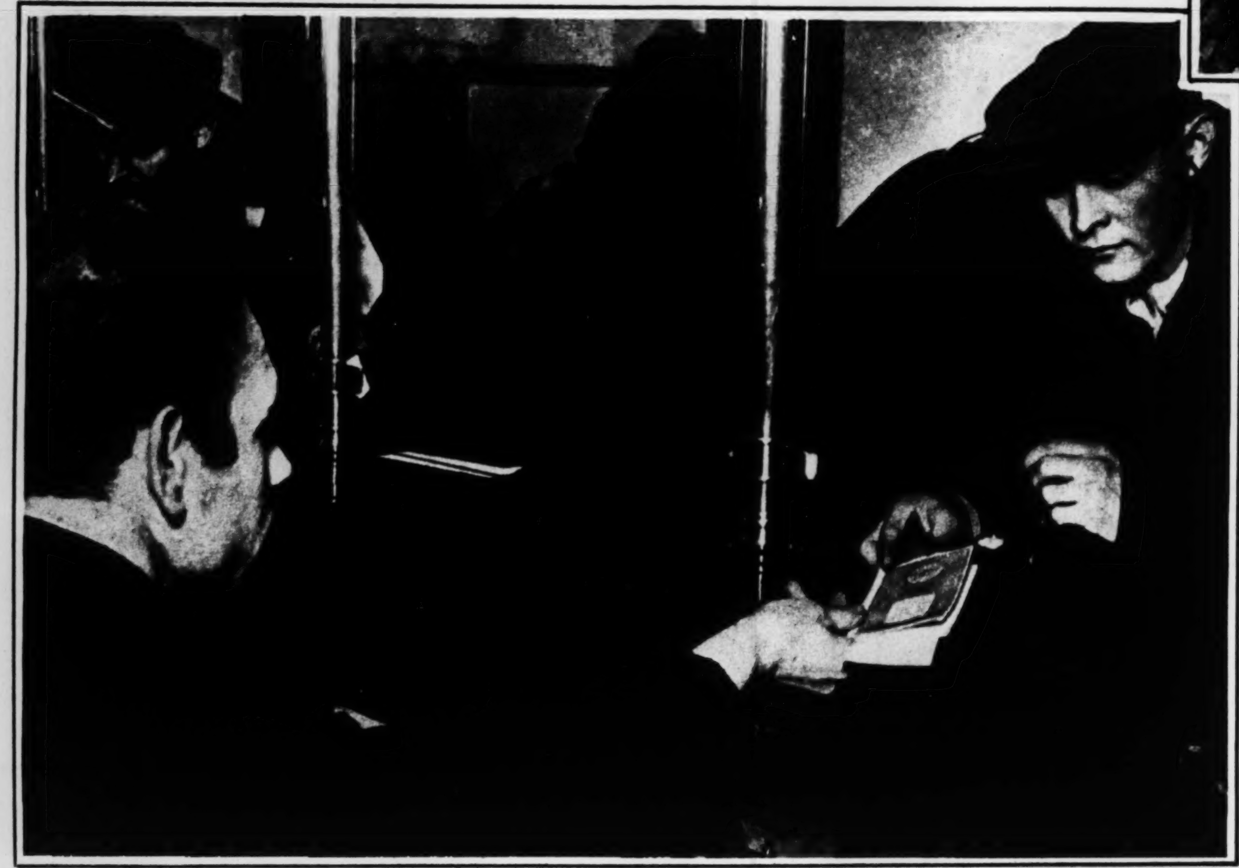
A young worker presents his check while a woman teller counts out the amount of his withdrawal.



A girl clerk in a Moscow bank tallies accounts and computes interest on savings — reduced to three per cent last year from six per cent—on a modern - calculating machine.



A coupon-clipping Communist checks up on holdings in the vaults of a Moscow bank. The bonds are, of course, in various state enterprises of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.



And this worker, one of more than 400,000 who have accounts of 500 rubles and up, is adding a mite to his savings.

84 out of every 100 women, who compare Wonder Bread with other breads in the famous 1-2-3 store test, agree: WONDER BREAD IS BEST

Note the tenderer crust, the pure, snowy-white color of Wonder Bread. Then—rub your fingers over a slice. Note how smooth, slightly moist it is . . . close-knit for easy spreading. No holes, lumps or imperfections.

Hold a slice of Wonder Bread close to your nose. And note that appetizing "wheaty" fragrance . . . so fresh and clean. Your nose, too, can tell you the remarkable difference between Wonder Bread and any other kind.

Then—taste a bite of Wonder Bread slowly. Let it linger in your mouth . . . so that you get all its delicious full-flavored goodness. Compare the slo-baked flavor the Wonder Bakers have spent a fortune to bring you.

THE PLEASURES OF TOBACCO

"For thy sake, Tobacco, I
Would do anything but die.
And but seek to extend my days,
Long enough to sing thy praise."
BY CHARLES LAMB
1775–1834

Poets sing the joys of Fine Tobaccos
. . . but NEVER of Adulterants

Pall Mall, The Modern Blend, does not adulterate its fine tobaccos. Song and story pay tribute to the flavour of tobacco, for tobacco has been a source of enjoyment to man for centuries.

Yet, unless you have smoked the new Pall Mall, you may never have tasted a blended cigarette that offered you the full enjoyment, the true flavour of fine tobaccos.

That's because most popular blended cigarettes are sweetened with syrup, flavoured with licorice and tonka bean extract, or with some of almost a hundred other ingredients.

When you want to smoke, it is tobacco you really want . . . and in Pall Mall alone among blended cigarettes are you sure of getting the true flavour of pure tobaccos.

Pall Mall starts with finer, more expensive tobaccos. Pall Mall blends these tobaccos in a new and special way. Thus you get a unique pleasure from smoking Pall Mall because you are enjoying to the full the natural flavour of pure tobacco . . . perhaps for the very first time.

DOESN'T THAT MAKE YOU DIZZY UP THERE, JUDGE?— SOME PLOP IF YOU FELL!
WHAT!—AN OLD MOUNTAIN-CLIMBER LIKE ME BECOME DIZZY AT THIS HEIGHT?
TOSH!-THIS IS HARDLY MORE THAN BEING ON TIP-TOE!
BUT SPEAKING OF FALLING FROM A GREAT HEIGHT, I'LL TELL YOU OF A TUMBLE I ONCE TOOK FROM MT. EVEREST!
AT AN ALTITUDE OF 7000 METERS, A 900-TON CHUNK OF SNOW BROKE OFF FROM UNDER ME!
HALF-WAY DOWN THE HUGE BLOCK OF SNOW CAME IN CONTACT WITH THE INTENSE HEAT OF THE VALLEY-WHICH SOON MELTED THE SNOW INTO A GREAT BALL OF WATER-
THE INSTANT THE WATER STRUCK THE GROUND—
I BROKE INTO A GRACEFUL DIVE AND DOVE INTO THE WATER BEFORE IT SPREAD OUT OVER THE VALLEY!
THIS'LL PUT HIM IN BACK OF THE 8-BALL WITH THAT WHOPPER!
AND NOT ONLY THAT, LAD, BUT THE FALL ALSO GAVE ME THE DISTINCTION OF BEING THE WORLD'S CHAMPION HIGHEST DIVER!
HERE, HERE, YOU KNAVE!—FETCH BACK THAT LADDER!!
WHAT!—DROP DOWN FROM THIS HEIGHT?- OH, COME NOW— —CONSIDER MY AGE AND WEIGHT!

THEY'RE STILL TALKING

About One of Baseball's Greatest Stories

The seven-year-old youngster plays catch for hours with his father near the big barn on their farm at Van Meter, Ia.

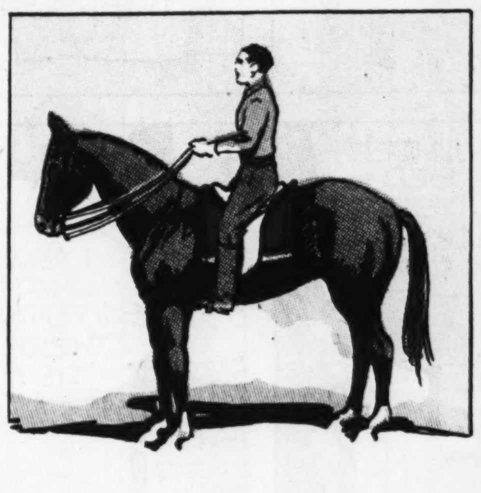
At 17 he is signed by the Cleveland American league team, waves goodbye to the family and the farm and swings onto the train he dreamed some day might carry him to the big league.

And then on Sept. 13, 1936 at Cleveland, that modest, lovable high school kid whistles that ball past the Philadelphia Athletics in a manner that leaves the fans stunned.

Three and two on the hitter. The kid is one strike from a new American league strikeout record. He throws. The hitter swings, misses. His seventeenth strikeout! The crowd is in a frenzy of excitement!

The boy was Bob Feller, who stepped from a cow pasture to a major league diamond and startled the baseball world.

Horsemanship . . . . . . by NED BRANT



Sitting

Assume a free and natural posture. Be comfortable. Hold the thighs and knees against the horse. Face straight ahead and sit well down in the saddle. Heels are a bit lower than the toes.

Reins

Hold the off side reins in the right hand and the near side reins in the left, thus separating them. Use the bit with great consideration for the horse. The snaffle rein is used to steady your mount. Use the curb rein pretty much as an emergency measure.
